Ticket to Standard Liege vs Liverpool (13.08.08)
Ticket to Liverpool vs PSV Eindhoven (01.10.08). Both tickets courtesy of UEFA.

I was paid a fee of 250 euros by the European Centre of Public Affairs (ECPA) for a speech on how the Lisbon Treaty would affect Parliament.

I have received no resources from any source other than the European Parliament for running my constituency and for paying my staff, except for a one-off donation from my trade union (GMB) when I first set up my Yorkshire office in 2000.

I employ three full time members of staff in my constituency office in the Leeds. They help me notably to deal with constituent's enquiries and case-work, research, correspondence, press, diary, publication of my reports and briefings, and maintenance of my website. In the Parliament, I employ two full time parliamentary assistants, and I regularly have a work-experience trainee (stagiaire), usually as part of their university studies, who is unpaid, but whose expenses I cover. Trainees are involved in work as much as possible, while giving them opportunities to study and learn about the parliament. My wife works (part time for less than £6,000 per annum net) on foreign language correspondance and articles, typing when I work at home, notably at weekends, maintaining files and organising my travel. I employ no-one in Strasbourg, but a member of staff travels there for most of the monthly sessions and I often have an Erasmus programme student from Strasbourg University helping during sessions. Together with all EPLP MEPs, I contribute to the salary of an additional staff member who is line managed by the EPLP Secretary General, who also acts as our service provider for this purpose. This member of staff works in London with the EPLP Secretariat and acts as a liaison for the Labour MEPs with the Government, Special Advisers, the Prime Minister's Office, the Parliamentary Labour Party, and the Labour Party.
