Tiia Falk studied French language and literature at the University of Tartu. Following that, she worked at Columbia University as a publications editor and then a genetic research coordinator. When the opportunity arose, she got her MA in conference interpreting at Tallinn University, where she also currently teaches interpreting. She also works as a freelance interpreter on the Estonian market.