EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

In July 2017 the European Parliament adopted the new Partnership on Research and Innovation in the Mediterranean Area (PRIMA) with a vast majority.

PRIMA is the first ever, Public-to-Public Partnership under Article 185 TFEU to target a specific geographical area, the Mediterranean Basin, including the participation of neighbouring EU countries.

For a period of 10 years and planned launching on 1-1-2018, the overall aim of PRIMA is the development and the adoption of innovative and integrated solutions for improving the efficiency, safety, security and sustainability of agro-food and water provision and management systems in the Mediterranean area.

PRIMA's specific objective is to coordinate, strengthen, intensify, widen and align the currently fragmented research and innovation national programmes of these sectors within a multi-actor, multidimensional comprehensive and integrated approach.

I consider PRIMA to be one of the rare attempts of EU science diplomacy that could also help address the forced displacement of the Mediterranean residents, therefore to address some of the root causes of migration. It is so far, the largest Euro-Mediterranean research and innovation initiative in this field, a unique opportunity for EU member states and Mediterranean third countries to join forces and an excellent example of how EU research and innovation is open to the world.

19 countries are jointly undertaking PRIMA, 11 Member States, 3 associated countries to Horizon 2020 and 5 third countries with which the international agreements for scientific and technological cooperation need to be concluded as stipulated in Article 1(2) of the decision. Therefore, after the adoption of the new Partnership on Research and Innovation in the Mediterranean Area (PRIMA) in July 2017, the European Commission has negotiated a series of international agreements with those third countries.

Given the fact that PRIMA will soon start to develop much-needed solutions for a more sustainable management of water and agro-food systems, the aim of these agreements is to enable these countries to participate as of January 2018.

In this context, I welcome the Commission proposal on the agreements already concluded with Algeria, Egypt, Jordan and Lebanon and I call on all ITRE members to give their consent along the legislative procedure.
