Subject: International fraud and the financing of Islamic terrorism

According to press reports, the Milan Public Prosecutor's Office has uncovered a network of fictitious companies that are engaging in systematic fraud – often at the expense of the Italian state – and using their illegal earnings to finance organisations connected with Islamic terrorism.

Since these networks operate in various EU countries and are run by first or second generation immigrants living outside Italy but within the EU, what potential action might the Commission take to combat this type of unlawful activities?

Will the Commission review its own policies on immigration and integration in the light of this situation?
