Subject: Radical Islam and the Schengen Area

With recent events once again showing the barbarity of radical Islam and the fact that many European countries are facing an unprecedented challenge when it comes to combating terrorism, we cannot continue with the otherworldly attitude that the EU has always shown.

Your predecessors wanted a Europe without borders, and today we are paying a heavy price for terrorism without borders.

With increasing calls for reform of the Schengen Agreement, is the Commission intending to start work on renegotiating the agreement, or will it dogmatically oppose the will of European states?
