

Question for written answer E-001834/2015
to the Commission
Rule 130
Ivan Jakovčić (ALDE)

Subject: Mobile telephony masts

Masts for the needs of mobile telephony have mushroomed on European soil. The need to use mobile phones inevitably requires an infrastructure and the erection of numerous phone masts which prejudice human health and disfigure the landscape.

Does the Commission have studies about the negative impact of radiation from mobile telephony masts on human health?

Is the Commission investing in research that could find an alternative to the questionable construction of numerous mobile telephony masts on European soil?