

Question for written answer E-003603/2015
to the Commission

Rule 130

Doru-Claudian Frunzuliță (S&D)

Subject: Climate Cooperation with the Chinese Government

Climate change has become the major global challenge of this century. China's growth over the past two decades means that while it is still treated as a developing country in climate negotiations, its economic position and influence far surpass that of any other developing country. Moreover, it can now afford expensive renewable energy production and climate adaptation.

What is the Commission's strategy to enhance climate cooperation between the EU and China?