Subject: Establishment of a European pension system

On 31 March 2015 a report was presented in the framework of the European Commission's white paper on pensions. The report said that there are currently no economic, legal or technical barriers to the creation of a European pensions system. As one of the four great European freedoms is the free movement of workers, it makes no sense to keep pension schemes sealed within the Member States.

- After the white paper on pensions, what action has the Commission taken, or is it thinking of taking, to create a European pension system?
- Has the Commission established a working timetable for the preparation of such a system?
