Subject: What more can the European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights do to ensure that its workforce is representative of EU citizens?

The Commission has previously stated that it 'strives to be representative of the increasingly diverse European citizens it serves' (response to Written Questions E-008102/14, E-007850/14 and E-007851/14).

How does the European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights, which falls under the competence of the Commission, judge its current workforce in terms of how representative it is of EU citizens?

What more can the Agency, which falls under the competence of the Commission, do to ensure it is more representative of EU citizens?
