

Question for written answer E-007990/2015
to the Commission
Rule 130
Hugues Bayet (S&D)

Subject: European public service policy

The European Union has no public service policy, posing problems for the future of these services in Europe. At European level, questions relating to public service are in fact almost exclusively seen at from the perspective of competition policy. As a result, the specific features of public services are not taken into account and this could lead to their destruction.

Is the Commission planning to adopt a genuine public service policy to reflect the specific features of this type of services and halt the trend towards marketisation of these services?