Subject: ICT

The use of ICT among young people is high, as they are often more likely to be at the forefront of adopting new technologies in terms of both hardware and software.

What strategy does the Commission have to utilise the skills acquired by young people through ICT use to upskill older generations and boost our future economy?

Does the Commission have any examples of best practice in this regard?

Also, how does the Commission ensure that the social and economic benefits of ICT are coupled with safe use of this medium by vulnerable sections of society?
