Subject: Young people taking part in sport and physical activity

Recent figures show the disparity between the number of young men in the EU who engage in sport or other physical activity and the number of young women, particularly between the ages of 14 and 24.

With the rise in diseases such as obesity, what new initiatives has the Commission introduced to raise the number of young people taking part in sport and physical exercise?

How does the Commission plan to reduce the gap between young men and young women?

Does the Commission have any evaluation of EU-funded projects which have succeeded in this aim to date in a Member State?
