Rule 130

Subject: The Education, Audiovisual and Culture Executive Agency (EACEA) and a workforce representative of EU citizens

The Commission has stated in the past that it 'strives to be representative of the increasingly diverse European citizens it serves' (answer to written questions E-008102/14, E-007850/14 and E-007851/14).

What policies does the Education, Audiovisual and Culture Executive Agency (EACEA), which falls under the competence of the Commission, have in place to ensure representativeness vis-à-vis Europe's increasingly diverse citizens?

What internal strategies does this agency, which falls under the competence of the Commission, have for its workforce to be representative of those increasingly diverse citizens?

How does the agency, recalling that it falls under the competence of the Commission, monitor and measure the success of its efforts to achieve diversity and representation of EU citizens in its workforce?
