Subject: Study on the impact of the EU-US trade agreement

The European Union is currently negotiating a major trade agreement with the United States, which will bring significant advantages, but also some risks that need to be looked at now, to ensure they are avoided in the event of an agreement eventually being reached.

In this respect, all the consequences of this agreement must be taken into account, and specifically the consequences for areas or zones that are more vulnerable, such as the outermost regions.

Is the Commission considering undertaking a preliminary study on the impact of the EU/US trade agreement on the outermost regions?

How will the consequences for these regions be dealt with?
