Subject: Burmese Government

With much publicity at the time, the Burmese Government eventually agreed to sign the Declaration of Commitment to End Sexual Violence in Conflict. Sadly this has not led to the decisive action we need to see in Burma. Recently there has been disturbing reports of the military's use of rape, and little commitment to ending impunity.

Working with the international community, what action can the Commission take if state signatories fail to honour their commitments under the Declaration of Commitment to End Sexual Violence in Conflict?
