Subject: Radicalisation in South Asia

According to reports from authorities in South Asian countries such as Pakistan and Afghanistan, but also European cities, imams and mosques are being used to promote ISIS ideology and recruit fighters who are then sent to Syria and Iraq or used for domestic terrorist attacks. In December 2015, the Pakistani authorities uncovered a network of women from wealthy Pakistani families who allegedly acted as fundraisers for ISIS and arranged marriages for its followers. At the same time, the US initiated a military campaign against ISIS fighters in Afghanistan, close to the borders with Pakistan.

What measures is the EU taking in Europe and in countries such as Pakistan and Afghanistan to ensure that no jihadist ideology and ISIS propaganda is promoted in Islamic mosques?

How is the EU enforcing the right of children and women to education in Pakistan and Afghanistan and the removal of hate speech from school materials and madrasa teachings?

Will the EU include the process for the elimination of radicalisation in the GSP+ status review for Pakistan?
