Rule 130
Jørn Dohrmann (ECR)

Subject: Islamists in Europe's security services and armed forces

It has emerged that Germany's counter-espionage service has found at least 20 Islamists in the Bundeswehr.

New legislation is therefore being drafted to enable the German authorities to investigate all recruits with a view to preventing any more Jihadists from infiltrating the military. It is not difficult to imagine a similar situation occurring among the security guards and other security staff at the EU institutions.

What is the Commission's take on the issue of the Islamist infiltration of private security firms and security services?

What will the Commission do to prevent Jihadists infiltrating those security firms and security services?

What has the Commission done to prevent Islamists from infiltrating security firms and security services?
