Subject: Healthcare provision for UK citizens in the EU post-Brexit

I have been contacted by UK citizens currently living in other EU Member States who are concerned about healthcare provision post-Brexit.

One gentleman living in France is suffering from cancer, and has so far received excellent treatment under the French healthcare system, of which he has become a member by virtue of continued extended benefits from the British social security system, of which he was a fully paid member for many years.

- What will happen to this gentleman's cancer treatment (and to the treatment of countless other UK citizens) after the UK leaves the EU?
- Can the Commission confirm whether these individuals' existing entitlements will continue, or whether their entitlements will change?
