

Question for written answer E-000328/2017
to the Commission
Rule 130
Alex Mayer (S&D)

Subject: Academic freedom in the world one year after the murder of Giulio Regeni: trade and funding

One year on from the tragic murder of Giulio Regeni, there has been little progress in bringing the perpetrators to justice. Meanwhile, academic freedom across the world continues to face challenges.

Academics from Syria, Egypt, Iraq and - above all following the unsuccessful coup attempt - Turkey have been forced to flee their countries. They also face obstacles to their work in the form of travel bans and security restrictions. The case of Giulio Regeni shows that European academics can also face severe risks when conducting research abroad.

1. What specific commitments to academic freedom are discussed when Commissioners negotiate trade agreements?
2. Is there EU funding for NGOs fighting for academic freedom?