Subject:     Roaming charges

In June 2017, the regulation ending roaming charges came into force. This was a major step forward, allowing EU citizens to take full advantage of digital communications and services when travelling to other Member States.

Further to my previous question QE-007139/2017 on assessing the impact of said Regulation, in compiling its interim report on the effects of Roam Like at Home (RLAH), due by the end of the year, has the Commission noticed rises in domestic tariffs to cover the hypothetical losses resulting from the elimination of roaming charges, or the emergence of specific tariffs that exclude roaming?
