

Question for written answer E-006125/2018
to the Commission
Rule 130
Alex Mayer (S&D)

Subject: A clean planet for all

For Europe to become the world's first major economy to go climate neutral by 2050, we must set ambitious targets for the future.

Does the Commission agree with me that central to any strategy must be several of the solutions suggested by those supporting sustainable finance models, namely that it is only by making green initiatives viable for investors and our wider economy that we can cure the social and environmental ills of today and the future?

Equally, does the Commission accept that ratings agencies, among others, must use a broader metric to help us all achieve a 'green finance' revolution?