Conflict management and regional reception

Points out that the present refugee crisis is largely due to crises at Europe's external borders; stresses therefore that conflict management should be assigned a major role in Europe's foreign policy and that that should be regarded as an integral part of a holistic approach to migration; considers that humanitarian aid and reception should be geared to limiting the impact of a conflict, inter alia, wherever possible, by according refugees effective help and reception in safe havens in the conflict area concerned, in neighbouring countries or in the region;

Amendment

1. Notes the principle of solidarity, as set out in Article 80 TFEU, which covers asylum, immigration and border control policies; stresses that solidarity goes hand in hand with the responsibility of Member States to ensure that all EU rules which have been adopted are efficiently implemented; asks the European Commission to ensure that Member States are applying the EU acquis and asks, when necessary, that the Commission makes swift and effective use of infringement procedures; stresses that good implementation of the entire EU acquis is essential to stabilize the current crisis situation within the EU, and will be more effective than ad hoc decision-making regarding the implementation of EU law, or the creation of any new "magic bullet" laws;
