Subject: EU Code of Practice on Disinformation

The first implementation reports on the EU Code of Practice on Disinformation have shown Facebook, Google and Twitter to be unwilling to provide all the necessary information to the Commission.

1. What does the Commission intend to do about the failure of Facebook, Google and Twitter to provide details about the results of the measures taken so far?
2. What does it intend to do about their failure to provide evidence that new policies and tools are being deployed in a timely manner, and receiving sufficient resources, across all Member States?
3. What immediate alternative penalties and legal or regulatory measures does it envisage applying in order to ensure that these companies comply with the code in time for the European elections in May?
