Title: Privacy & Surveillance: Speaking Out for Human Rights in a Connected World

The Summary: The internet and social media has provided human rights' activists with effective ways to communicate and campaign across borders resulting in greater global awareness of human rights abuses. But a growing fear of terrorism can also close down society. Central to this limitation is a mistrust of state surveillance which increasingly cites the risk of terrorism as a rationale for intruding on our private lives. How can we remain active human rights campaigners living under watchful eyes?

My speech:

Growing terrorist threats in the world have justified mass surveillance of the public and individual life. Prevention measures implemented by different states reflect control and monitoring of Internet communication, landline or mobile telephone as well as tracking of individual's locations or illegal detentions.

Mass surveillance pose a significant challenge to the legality and human rights. The public opinion expresses its concerns about lack of governmental transparency associated with surveillance policies, laws and practices.

Moreover, numerous governments and international bodies sometimes pay most of the attention to the 'hard' measures of preventing and responding to terrorism activities and they ignore essential human rights.

In fact, surveillance activities may take place only in accordance with domestic and international law such as International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights or European Charter of Fundamental Rights.

It should be also pointed out that the Global Network for Rights and Development (GNRD) has launched a global initiative, aimed at creating an independent, transparent and legitimate international mechanism based on an internationally agreed Convention.

I hope that our workshop, speeches, presentations and discussions will lead to relevant conclusions and recommendations that will deal with ideas and goals of the Conference and the GNRD's Convention and will lead to successful measures and policies regarding appropriate balances between human rights, mass surveillance and counter-terrorism.

Julie Ward

Member of the Group of the Progressive Alliance of Socialists and Democrats in the European Parliament

Honorable Mrs. Ward,

On behalf of the Global Network for Rights and Development (GNRD) we cordially invite you to the international conference "Balancing Counter-Terrorism and Human Rights: Challenges and Opportunities", that will be held at the Hotel President Wilson, 47, Quai Wilson, Geneva, Switzerland from February 16th to 17th, 2015.

This conference will provide a multi-dimensional analysis of globally implemented counter-terrorism measures from a human rights perspective, considering the latest security threats and challenges, such as increasing radicalization and the rising oppression of civil liberties. The programme of the conference will also include a discussion of the draft of the International Convention on Balancing Counter-Terrorism and Human Rights, as well as an introduction of the International Initiative on Human Rights and Counter-Terrorism, coordinated by GNRD.

GNRD has invited Ministers of Foreign Affairs of all UN member states, related UN bodies, international governmental and nongovernmental organizations, etc. We are currently in the process of receiving confirmations. Heads or high representatives of the African Union, the European Parliament, COMESA, Arab Leagues, and the Council of Arab Interior Ministers have also been invited.

We would be delighted if you choose to accept our invitation for the conference and attend this important meeting in Geneva. GNRD believes that your participation as a member of the EU Parliament will provide an invaluable contribution to the conference and strengthen international dialogue on the extremely important topic of balancing counter-terrorism measures and human rights.

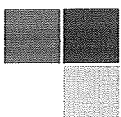

We would be most grateful if you confirm participation to Ms. Janneke Stein, Conference Coordinator (hrctr@gnr.net). Ms. Stein is available at your convenience to finalize arrangements or if you require any additional information.

Yours sincerely,

Global Network for Rights and Development Executive Committee

Global Network for Rights and Development Department on Human Rights and Counter-Terrorism

The Global Network for Rights and Development (GNRD) is an International NGO established in June 2008 with the aim to enhance and support both human rights and development by adopting new strategies and policies for real change.
