Text proposed by the Commission

(1a) The Opinion of the European Data Protection Supervisor (EDPS) of 25 March 2011, and particularly paragraphs 7 to 16 and 25, 55, and 57, expressed the opinion that the initial proposal for a Directive did not meet the essential prerequisite of any development of a PNR scheme- i.e. compliance with the necessity and proportionality principles, to the extent that the EDPS questions the inclusion in the proposal of serious crime crimes which have no link with terrorism.

Recital 1 b (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(1b) Opinion 10/2011 of the Article 29 Working Party adopted on 5 April 2011 stated that there was a lack of information on the effectiveness and appropriateness of existing EU systems and tools for police and judicial co-operation to fight terrorism and organised crime, and questioned the necessity of such a proposal and expressed serious doubts about the proportionality of the collection of a huge amount of personal information on passengers regardless of whether or not they are suspects.

(10) To prevent, detect, investigate and prosecute terrorist offences and serious crime, it is therefore essential that all Member States introduce provisions laying down obligations on air carriers operating international flights to or from the territory of the Member States of the European Union.

Justification

This amendment takes account of the consequences of the inclusion of all flights within the Union in the scope of the directive. The formulation ‘flights inside and outside the Union’ is preferable to ‘international/ internal flights’, which is derived from the Schengen Borders Code and is not appropriate in a directive which is to apply to the whole territory of the European Union.

Amendment

(13) PNR data should be transferred to a single designated agency of the European Union (Passenger Information Unit), so as to ensure clarity and reduce costs to air carriers.

Justification

It is undesirable to establish a decentralised system. Both the costs of setting it up and the ongoing staff and infrastructure costs entailed by up to 27 national Passenger Information Units would be disproportionately high in comparison with those of a centralised system. If a decentralised system were to be operated, responsibility for establishing it would rest with the individual Member States. For many Member States this task would be too onerous, both organisationally and financially, at a time of economic difficulty.

Amendment

(29) As a result of the legal and technical differences between national provisions concerning the processing of personal data, including PNR, air carriers are and will be faced with different requirements regarding the types of information to be transmitted, as well as the conditions under which this information needs to be provided to competent national authorities. These differences may be prejudicial to effective cooperation between the competent national authorities for the purposes of preventing, detecting, investigating and prosecuting terrorist offences or serious transnational crime.

1. This Directive provides for the transfer by air carriers of Passenger Name Record data of passengers of international flights to and from the Member States, as well as the processing of that data, including its collection, use and retention by the Member States and its exchange between them.

Amendment

1. This Directive provides for the transfer by air carriers of Passenger Name Record data of passengers of flights inside and outside the Union to and from the Member States, as well as the processing of that data, including its collection, use and retention by the Member States and its exchange between them.

Or. fr

Justification

This amendment takes account of the consequences of the inclusion of all flights within the Union in the scope of the directive. The formulation ‘inside and outside the Union’ is preferable to ‘international/internal flights’, which is derived from the Schengen Borders Code and is not appropriate in a directive which is to apply to the whole territory of the European Union.
