

Dr. Florence Gaub is a Senior Analyst at the European Union Institute for Security Studies where she heads the Middle East / Mediterranean programme. She works on the Arab world with a focus on strategy and security. In addition to monitoring post-conflict developments in Iraq, Lebanon and Libya, she works on Arab military forces, conflict structures, geostrategic dimensions of the Arab region and intercultural communication.

Previously employed at NATO Defence College and the German parliament, she wrote her PhD on the Lebanese army at Humboldt University Berlin and holds degrees from Sciences Po Paris, Sorbonne and Munich universities. She has published several articles and two books on these topics, and has lectured widely with NATO school Oberammergau, Joint Forces Command Naples and several think tanks and universities in the Middle East, Europe and the United States.

Dr. Gaub has also served as a research fellow in the German Parliament, focusing on issues of defence, internal security and development. She has also held positions with the French Defence Ministry's Centre for Defense –related Social Sciences, the Centre for Security Studies in Sarajevo, the Centre for Applied Policy Research in Munich, as well as with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in New York, where she coordinated courses for diplomats posted at the United Nations. She has conducted extensive field studies in Lebanon, Libya, Egypt, Iraq, Nigeria and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Florence Gaub completed her PhD in the Department of Political Science at Humboldt-University Berlin. Before, she graduated from Sorbonne University in Paris and Ludwig-Maximilians-University in Munich. A French-German National, she is fluent in English and Arabic.

