Brussels, 27 September 2017, Hemicycle of the European Parliament

'A European strategy to enhance the competitiveness of the tourism industry, a key driver for job creation'

On 25 March 2017, the leaders of the EU institutions and of the 27 Member States signed a solemn Declaration in Rome marking the anniversary of the Treaties. This Declaration emphasises that growth and employment are main priorities for the Union.

The tourism industry is a strategic sector in that context. Today, directly and indirectly, it already accounts for some 10% of GDP and jobs in Europe. Tourism also generates spin-offs in other key sectors, such as retail, agriculture and food, transport, construction, cultural and creative industries, textiles and shipbuilding.

At a time when the digital revolution, advanced manufacturing techniques and robotics lead to a diminished reliance on labour, tourism remains one of the most labour-intensive industries.

According to the World Tourism and Travel Council, more than 5 million new jobs linked to tourism may be created in the European Union over the next 10 years. 20% of these jobs go to young people under 25. Tourism hence represents a main avenue to combat youth unemployment, especially in several southern Regions where one out of two youths are unemployed.

The number of international tourists are set to double, from 1.1 billion to more than 2 billion, between now and 2030. Many of these tourists will come from an emerging new class with high spending power, half of which will come from Asia.

Europe, with its unique cultural heritage, landscape and nature, can attract a good part of this new demand. However, it would be a serious mistake to simply wait for this new growth to arrive like manna from heaven. Until the end of the 1990s, Europe played host to more than half the world's tourists; today, although it remains the world's first destination, that figure has dropped to 42%, and it is set to dwindle further to 30% by 2030.

Competition from new tourist destinations is increasing at a time when the European industry is facing significant challenges: investments, the digital revolution, the business environment, upgrading of skills, the fragmentation of efforts in promoting Europe as a destination and sustainability. To exploit the full potential of this sector the Union should support the effort of the tourism industry to become more competitive, transforming these challenges into opportunities.

The European Parliament is very active in this area, through the work of its Committee on Transport and Tourism, of a Task Force and of the Intergroup on Tourism and other relevant Committees. In September 2015, it adopted a resolution calling for an integrated European tourism policy.

For these reasons, on the 27 of September, World Tourism Day, the European Parliament is organising a high-level event to promote a European strategy on tourism as a key driver of growth and job creation.
