Recital 3 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

(3a) The part of the population of the European Union comprised of persons over the age of 50 will increase at a much faster rate than ever before. The largest increase is expected to occur during the period 2015-2035, when the population aged 60 and over will be increasing by 2 million people per year. This increase is very positive, as it is a logical consequence of improvements in health care and quality of life. Nevertheless, owing to the reality of demographic change, the EU faces a number of challenges such as a shrinking population and the unattractive nature of certain areas.

(4) Successive European Councils have recognised the need to tackle the effect of ageing populations on European social models. A key response to this rapid change in the age structure consists in promoting active ageing and thus ensuring that the baby boom cohorts, who are, on the whole, healthier and better educated than any such cohort before them, have good opportunities for employment and active participation in society.

Amendment

(4a) The demographic changes currently occurring in Europe are the most significant to have taken place in the last 50 years or more; due to improved healthcare systems, treatments, and lifestyle choices, it is possible for a growing population of elderly people to be economically, socially, and creatively active for far longer, and Member States and the Union should harness the benefits of this

(5) The growing proportion of older people in Europe makes it more important than ever to promote healthy ageing. Healthy ageing can help raise labour market participation of older people, enable them to be active in society for longer, improve their individual quality of life and curb the strains on health and social care systems.

Amendment

(5) The growing proportion of older people in Europe makes it more essential than ever to preserve intergenerational solidarity. Such solidarity must be based on improving social and intergenerational cohesion and promoting a good quality of life in order to combat social exclusion. Enabling those older people who so desire to stay in employment, even part-time, can be a vehicle for social inclusion, giving such people a positive image thanks to their participation and in some cases making it possible to improve their individual quality of life and curb the strains on health and social care systems.

Amendment

(5) The growing proportion of older people in Europe makes it more important than ever to promote healthy ageing by ensuring universal and equal access to healthcare. Healthy ageing with maximum functional ability can help raise labour market participation of older people, enable them to be active in society for longer, improve their individual quality of life and curb the strains on health and social care systems. With a view to achieving this, fitness classes and sporting activities should be promoted among older people, who should accordingly be afforded easier access to public sports facilities.

(10) The Commission emphasised it its Communication on ‘Europe 2020 - A strategy for smart, sustainable and inclusive growth’ the importance to the European Union of promoting a healthy and active ageing population in the interests of social cohesion and higher productivity. It proposed a flagship initiative ‘An agenda for new skills and jobs’, under which Member States should notably promote active ageing policies, and a flagship initiative on a ‘European Platform against Poverty’. Achieving these policy goals requires action from all levels of government and various non-governmental stakeholders; they can in turn be supported, at the Union level, by European Year activities aimed at raising awareness and fostering the exchange of good practice. National coordinators should see to it that national action is coordinated and is consistent with the overall objectives of the European Year. The participation of other institutions and stakeholders is also planned.

Amendment

The overall purpose of the European Year shall be to encourage and support the efforts of Member States, their regional and local authorities, social partners and civil society to take practical steps to promote better social inclusion of people over the age of 50, bearing in mind the contribution they can make in economic, social and cultural terms to preserving intergenerational solidarity. Efforts to promote the social inclusion of older people must take account of their specific needs on the basis of a residential approach. To this end, it is key for the European Year to support and leverage local and regional projects in order to promote intergenerational mixing, appropriate housing modifications and access to public services and care, in a manner able to be tailored to urban and rural environments and demographic trends in a given area. Coupled with the creation of better opportunities and working conditions, these measures will serve as a basis for enabling older people to play their part in the labour market and volunteering activities, and for combating social exclusion by fostering active participation in society and encouraging

Each Member State shall appoint a national coordinator responsible for organising its involvement in the European Year. The national coordinators should also see to it that national activities are properly

coordinated and that civil society organisations are fully involved in the design and implementation of the European Year at local, regional and national level.

Or. en

Justification

There are numerous civil society organisations involved on the local and regional level in the field of active ageing. Their experience, expertise and resources could provide significant multipliers to the efforts by public bodies. Therefore they must be engaged and involved from start to finish at all levels of activity in the European Year.
