Recital 1

Text proposed by the Commission

(1) The main motive for cross-border organised crime is financial gain. In order to be effective, law enforcement and judicial authorities should be given the means to trace, freeze, manage and confiscate the proceeds of crime.

Amendment

(1) The main motive for most crime, and particularly cross-border organised crime, including mafia-type criminal organization, is financial gain. In order to be effective, appropriate competent authorities should be given the means to trace, freeze, manage and confiscate the proceeds of crime. However, effective prevention of and fight against organized crime should not be limited to the neutralization of the proceeds of crime but should be extended, in some cases, even to property in any way related to such criminal associations. It is not enough, therefore, merely to ensure mutual recognition in the EU of seizure and confiscation of proceeds of crime. An effective fight against economic crime would also require the mutual recognition of measures taken in a different field from that of criminal law or otherwise adopted in the absence of a criminal conviction and that they have as their object, more broadly, any possible asset or income attributable to a criminal organization or to a person with a criminal conduct or suspected to belong to a criminal organization.

Or. en

Justification

This recital deals with the importance of confiscation against serious and organised crime. In particular it underlines the importance of non conviction based confiscation systems in the fight against serious and organised crime. These systems should be effective, mutually recognised and used in Member States.

Recital 1

Text proposed by the Commission

(1) The main motive for cross-border organised crime is financial gain. In order to be effective, law enforcement and judicial authorities should be given the means to trace, freeze, manage and confiscate the proceeds of crime.

Amendment

(1) The main motive for organised crime, and particularly cross-border crime, is financial gain. In order to be effective, law enforcement and judicial authorities should be given the means to trace, freeze, manage and confiscate the proceeds of crime.

Text proposed by the Commission

(1) The main motive for cross-border organised crime is financial gain. In order to be effective, law enforcement and judicial authorities should be given all means to trace, freeze, manage and confiscate the proceeds of crime.

Amendment

(1) One decisive outcome of cross-border organised crime is that it generates substantial financial gain. In order to provide the necessary counterweight to this criminal strategy, law enforcement and judicial authorities have to be given all means to trace, freeze, manage and confiscate the proceeds of crime.

Text proposed by the Commission

(2) Organised criminal groups operate without borders and increasingly acquire assets in other Member States and in third countries. There is an increasing need for effective international law enforcement cooperation on asset recovery and mutual legal assistance.

Amendment

(2) Organised criminal groups operate without borders and increasingly acquire assets in other Member States and in third countries. There is an increasing need for effective international law enforcement cooperation on asset recovery and mutual legal assistance. The adoption of minimum rules will harmonise the Member State's freezing and confiscation regimes facilitating mutual trust and effective cross-border cooperation.

Amendment 37
Sarah Ludford

Proposal for a directive
Recital 7 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

(7a) This Directive concerns only criminal law confiscation measures. It does not prescribe minimum rules in respect of any civil law measures which a Member State may have in respect of the confiscation of assets considered to be the proceeds of crime.

Or. en

Justification

This keeps a broad provision but ensures Member States can apply civil forfeiture powers under their existing law or establish criminal-based non-conviction based powers pursuant to this Directive. It would ensure full coverage across the EU, but without putting civil forfeiture powers in this criminal law instrument.

Amendment 38
Sarah Ludford

Proposal for a directive
Recital 7 b (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

(7b) Member States are free to take confiscation procedures which are linked to a criminal case in front of any court whether criminal, civil or administrative.

Or. en

Justification

This makes clear that Member States can implement the Directive through whatever type of court proceedings suits their national system.

Amendment 39
Mariya Gabriel

Proposal for a directive
Recital 9

Text proposed by the Commission

(9) Confiscation of instrumentalities and proceeds following a final decision of a court and of property of equivalent value to those proceeds should therefore refer to this broadened concept for the criminal offences covered by this Directive. Framework Decision 2001/500/JHA required Member States to enable the confiscation of instrumentalities and proceeds of crime following a final conviction and to enable the confiscation of property of equivalent value to the proceeds of crime. Such obligations should be maintained for the criminal offences not covered by this Directive.

Amendment

(9) Confiscation of instrumentalities and proceeds following a final decision of a court, both based on a conviction or in the absence of criminal conviction, and of property of equivalent value to those proceeds should therefore refer to this broadened concept for the criminal offences covered by this Directive. Framework Decision 2001/500/JHA required Member States to enable the confiscation of instrumentalities and proceeds of crime following a final conviction and to enable the confiscation of property of equivalent value to the proceeds of crime. conviction and to enable the confiscation of property of equivalent value to the proceeds of crime. Such obligations should be maintained for the criminal offences not covered by this Directive and the concept of proceeds as defined in this Directive should be extended also for the criminal offences not covered by this Directive.

Or. en

Justification

Having several definitions of proceeds would create many differences between the MS. All MS should have a common and broad definition of proceeds of crime. This was also an explicit indication made by the European Parliament in the resolution on organised crime in the EU of October 2011.

(11) In accordance with the principle of ne bis in idem it is appropriate to exclude from extended confiscation the proceeds of alleged criminal activities for which the affected person has been finally acquitted in a previous trial or in other cases where the ne bis in idem principle applies.

Recital 12

Text proposed by the Commission

(12) The issuance of confiscation orders generally requires a criminal conviction. In some cases, even where a criminal conviction cannot be achieved, it should still be possible to confiscate assets in order to disrupt criminal activities and ensure that profits resulting from criminal activities are not reinvested into the licit economy. Some Member States allow confiscation where there is insufficient evidence for a criminal prosecution, if a court considers on the balance of probabilities that the property is of illicit origin, and also in situations where a suspect or accused person becomes a fugitive to avoid prosecution, is unable to stand trial for other reasons or died before the end of criminal proceedings. This is referred to as non-conviction based confiscation. Provision should be made to enable non-conviction based confiscation in at least the latter, limited, circumstances in all Member States. This is in line with Article 54.1.c) of the United Nations Convention against Corruption, which provides that each State Party is to consider taking the necessary measures to allow confiscation of illicitly acquired property without a criminal conviction, including in cases in which the offender cannot be prosecuted by reason of death, flight or absence.

Text proposed by the Commission

(12) The issuance of confiscation orders generally requires a criminal conviction. In some cases, even where a criminal conviction cannot be achieved, it should still be possible to confiscate assets in order to disrupt criminal activities and ensure that profits resulting from criminal activities are not reinvested into the licit economy. Some Member States allow confiscation where there is insufficient evidence for a criminal prosecution, if a court considers on the balance of probabilities that the property is of illicit origin, and also in situations where a suspect or accused person becomes a fugitive to avoid prosecution, is unable to stand trial for other reasons or died before the end of criminal proceedings. Amendment

(12) The issuance of confiscation orders generally requires a criminal conviction. In some cases, even where a criminal conviction cannot be achieved, it should anyhow be possible to confiscate assets in order to disrupt criminal activities and ensure that profits resulting from criminal activities are not reinvested into the licit economy. Some Member States allow confiscation where there is insufficient evidence for a criminal prosecution or regardless a criminal prosecution, if a court considers, on the balance of probabilities, that the property of a person socially dangerous or having a criminal lifestyle is of illicit origin or disproportionate if compared to his declared income, and also in situations where a suspect or accused person becomes a fugitive to avoid prosecution, is unable to stand trial for other reasons or died before the end of criminal proceedings. This is referred to as non-conviction based confiscation. This is in line with Article 54.1.c) of the United Nations Convention against Corruption, which provides that each State Party is to consider taking the necessary measures to allow confiscation of illicitly acquired property without a criminal conviction, including in cases in which the offender cannot be prosecuted by reason of death, flight or absence or in other appropriate cases.

Axel Voss, Monika Hohlmeier, Manfred Weber, Jan Philipp Albrecht, Hubert Pirker

Proposal for a directive

Recital 12 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

(12a) In individual cases it should be possible to dispense, wholly or in part, with a confiscation order. Thus this would be possible in cases where the measure would disproportionately burden the person affected or lead to the loss of his livelihood, or if the cost of the confiscation disproportionately exceeds the amount being confiscated.

Or. de

Justification

The Commission proposal does not currently contain any provisions for cases of undue hardship. Where the conditions for confiscation exist, confiscation would necessarily be ordered. In order to prevent disproportionate consequences it is essential to introduce a 'hardship clause'.

Recital 13

Text proposed by the Commission

(13) The practice by a suspected or accused person of transferring property to a knowing third party with a view to avoiding confiscation is common and increasingly widespread. The current Union legal framework does not contain binding rules on the confiscation of property transferred to third parties. Therefore it is becoming increasingly necessary to allow for confiscation of property transferred to third parties, which should normally take place when an accused person does not have property that can be confiscated. It is appropriate to provide for third party confiscation, under certain conditions, following an assessment, based on specific facts, that the confiscation of property of the convicted, suspected or accused person is unlikely to succeed, or in situations where unique objects must be restored to their rightful owner. Furthermore, to protect the interests of bona fide third parties, such confiscation should only be possible if the third party knew or should have known that property was the proceeds of crime or was transferred in order to avoid confiscation and was given for free or transferred in exchange for an amount lower than its market value.

Amendment

(18a) Some Member States have already successfully adopted non conviction-based systems of confiscation. As a matter of facts, the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) has never considered as a violation of fundamental rights, sanctioned in the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union and in the European Convention on Human Rights, the fact that individuals can be subjected to such a measure of privation of their goods.

Amendment

(1) 'proceeds' means any direct economic advantage derived from a criminal offence; it may consist of any form of property and includes any subsequent reinvestment or transformation of direct proceeds by a suspected or accused person and any valuable benefits;

Or. en

Justification

The definition of proceeds as "any economic advantage derived from a criminal offence" is rather ambiguous and very vague, and cannot allow for a coherent, uniform assessment of the economic advantage that should be skimmed. This can lead to significant differences in the evaluation of the confiscated amount. While some states will confiscate the proceeds or a surrogate, others might also confiscate profits from following non criminal activities.

The right to property means that non-conviction based confiscation must be subject to strict constitutional standards. It is constitutionally sound only if the relevant court is convinced of the criminal origin of the object concerned following a thorough examination of all the evidence. Justification

The option of non-conviction-based confiscation in the event of the death of the suspected or accused person should be deleted. 2. The confiscation of proceeds or property referred to in paragraph 1 shall be possible where the property is subject to restitution or where

2. The confiscation of proceeds or property referred to in paragraph 1 shall be possible where

Justification

The existence of a (civil-law) claim to restitution does not create an entitlement to confiscate proceeds or property from a third party. The state's right to confiscate illicitly acquired property must be strictly separated from the injured party's civil-law claim to restitution; in principle the two are mutually exclusive. At any rate we should avoid confusing the two claims.

Amendment 153

Axel Voss, Monika Hohlmeier, Manfred Weber, Jan Philipp Albrecht, Hubert Pirker

Proposal for a directive

Article 8 – paragraph 6 – subparagraph 1 (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

The confiscation of a set of assets shall have the effect of preventing further confiscation in respect of the same assets. The Member States shall take the necessary measures to ensure that multiple confiscations in respect of the same assets are avoided.

Or. de

Justification

The proposal for a directive makes no mention of how to proceed if several Member States are investigating different persons in respect of alleged offences and if the confiscation of the same proceeds of these offences is an option in each of the various Member States. There is no provision for such a combination of circumstances under current law. Specifically, this is not an instance of ‘Ne bis in idem’ under Article 54 of the Convention implementing the Schengen Agreement, since forfeiture of criminal assets does not fall within the commonly accepted meaning of ‘penalty’.

Amendment 154

Axel Voss, Monika Hohlmeier, Manfred Weber, Jan Philipp Albrecht, Hubert Pirker

Proposal for a directive

Article 8 – paragraph 6 – subparagraph 2 (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

All Member States shall take the necessary measures to ensure that, where as a result of a criminal offence injured parties have claims against the accused, confiscation does not jeopardise the enforcement of such claims.

Or. de

Justification

There should be uniform rules on dealing with claims by injured parties. It would go against the aims of the Commission’s other legislation on victims’ rights if European law on confiscation meant that injured parties’ claims could not be enforced. It needs to be ensured that the confiscation provided by the proposal for a directive cannot thwart the claims of injured parties.

Amendment

Each Member State shall take the necessary measures to make it possible to determine the precise extent of the property to be confiscated. The decision must be proportionate and take into account any hardship to the accused or convicted person or any affected person.

Or. en

Justification

The measure must be applicable to all actions under the Directive and ensure that only assets are taken which would be proportionate with the property rights of the accused, convicted and affected persons, and the criminal activity concerned.

Amendment 161

Axel Voss, Monika Hohlmeier, Manfred Weber, Jan Philipp Albrecht, Hubert Pirker

Proposal for a directive
Article 9 – paragraph 1 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

In individual cases it may be possible, in accordance with the proportionality principle, to dispense, wholly or in part, with a confiscation order if confiscation would create undue hardship for the person affected or his family members. Such a case shall be deemed to exist if the measure would disproportionately burden the person affected or lead to destruction of his livelihood, or if the cost of the confiscation disproportionately exceeds the amount being confiscated.

Or. de

Justification

The Commission proposal currently makes no provision for cases of undue hardship: where the conditions for confiscation exist, confiscation will necessarily be ordered. In order to prevent disproportionate consequences it is essential to introduce a 'hardship clause'. Under the proportionality principle, confiscation must not lead to the loss of the affected natural person's livelihood, or destruction of the affected legal entity.

Proposal for a directive

Article 10 – paragraph 2 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

2a. Each Member State shall take the necessary measures, based on existing best practices, to provide for the disposal and the destination of property confiscated. It shall be a priority to destine such property to law enforcement and crime prevention projects as well as to other projects of public interest and social utility. Any other destination of such property shall be considered only if the above mentioned are not possible and in any case each Member State shall take all the necessary measures to prevent any criminal or illegal infiltration in this phase.
