EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

The present Agreement between the EU and Norway was negotiated in order to enact the changes brought by the reform of the General System of Preferences (GSP) rules of origin in 2010. The reform introduced a new system of cumulation of origin by registered exporters and provided for inclusion of Turkey in the system of cumulation which so far worked between the Union, Switzerland and Norway. The new legislation also provided for replacing of the former Certificates of origin of Form A by a new system of establishment of proofs of origin by registered exporters (Registered Exporter (REX) system).

The system of cumulation was initially put in place under the agreement in the form of exchange of letters between the EU and Norway of 29 January 2001 (Council Decision 2001/101/EC). This agreement has to be substituted by a new one. In 2012, the Council authorised the Commission to conduct negotiations with Norway. These negotiations have now concluded and resulted in the present Agreement.

The system of cumulation of origin: The new system of cumulation entails that the EU, Norway, Switzerland and Turkey will allow GSP beneficiary countries to incorporate materials from any of the countries in the system (EU, Norway, Switzerland, Turkey) in their production processes, and export the final product to the EU, Switzerland, Norway or Turkey under the GSP preferential terms provided that the final product has been sufficiently worked or processed. Under the present Agreement, the EU and Norway will give preferential treatment and access to products originating in beneficiary countries when these countries use materials originating respectively in the EU or in Norway.

The new system of proofs: The GSP reform states that the former Certificates of origin of Form A were to be replaced by 1 January 2017. The new REX system has started to apply on 1 January 2017 in a certain number of GSP beneficiary countries constituting a first wave. Two more such waves are planned in 2018 and 2019. These countries have registered their exporters, who are now making out statements on origin instead of using certificates of origin Form A issued by their customs authorities. The REX system already works in the framework of the GSP scheme granted by the EU, and the GSP schemes of Norway and Switzerland. When the replacement of proofs of origin is done for re-consigning goods originating in GSP beneficiary countries, the replacement certificates of Form A are currently being used as replacement proofs (under the provisions of the current agreement between the EU, Norway and Switzerland).

In order for the cumulation system to apply to Switzerland and Turkey, the parties have to conclude and apply similar agreements with Switzerland and Turkey. A similar agreement between the EU and Switzerland was negotiated and concluded in parallel to the present Agreement, and is submitted to the consent of Parliament. Between the EU and Turkey, an international agreement is not needed, as the EU-Turkey Customs Union provides the legal tool to integrate similar rules in its legislation.

The Present Agreement is necessary to ensure smooth running of trade between the European Union and Norway. It will enable the EU and Norway to use the new replacement proofs of origin provided for by the new REX system. The system is already applicable, therefore the lack of the appropriate legal tool could disrupt trade between the EU and Norway. Your Rapporteur therefore recommends the Parliament to grant consent to this Agreement.
