

Dr Charlotte Duke

Dr Charlotte Duke is a Partner with London Economics and lead of the consumer behaviour and experimental economics work programme. Charlotte delivers consumer behaviour and experimental economic advice to private and public sector clients across Europe, and internationally

Charlotte is a regular invited expert speaker at international policy forums. Recent examples include the OECD Committee on Consumer Policy roundtable on the use of behavioural economics in consumer policy where Charlotte spoke on the use of behavioural economics in consumer policy design and implementation, and the UK Financial Conduct Authority Industrial Behavioural Organisation at which Charlotte participated in a roundtable discussion with academics and regulators on consumer behaviour in the financial sector.

Charlotte has a PhD in economics undertaken at the University of Melbourne Australia and University College London UK.