Can a European sense of identity be reconciled with the yearning for a strong local or regional identity or feeling of belonging?

This raises a number of questions that are not at all easy to answer.

What does common cultural identity mean in a society, what determines it and how does it change? Do we need it? How does it relate to other cultural identities?

Europe –my homeland!?

We certainly have to be aware that, while many people on this continent have long found it natural to regard Europe as their home, many others do not think along these lines and instead define “home” in local or regional terms.

We have to think Europe differently, and stressed diversity
and unity are based on difference and acceptance.
That's why a European Year of Cultural Heritage
make sense now ! The messages of 2018 are so impor
for the legacy!

How can we define marked historical and cultural learning
and identity spaces for Europe to better tell
and share the story of Europe?
We need it for sharing our common European future!
