

Dr Sidney Wong is a Public Health specialist, who is currently the interim Executive Director of Medecins Sans Frontieres (MSF) Access Campaign. He leads a team advocating to break down the systemic barriers that prevent equitable access to existing and novel medicines and medical tools that are affordable and suitable, particularly for crisis affected and marginalized populations. Prior to this he has completed a seven-year term as Medical Director for MSF. His Global Health experience spans fifteen years; this includes working directly as a clinician and a medical manager in complex humanitarian emergencies as well as setting organizational medical strategies, policies and research agendas. He has programmatic and research interests in developing quality assurance and improvement of healthcare and practical applications of ethical frameworks for humanitarian contexts. Sid completed his general medical and specialist Public Health training in the UK; attending Nottingham Medical School and awarded a Masters in Public Health from Cambridge University.
