European Union, especially in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) region;
whereas this phenomenon is speeding up and taking on significant proportions;

- B. whereas radicalisation has become a term used to describe the phenomenon of people embracing intolerant opinions, views and ideas which could lead to violent extremism;
- C. whereas the recent terrorist attacks in France, Belgium, Tunisia and Copenhagen highlight the security threat which is posed by the presence and movement of these ‘foreign’ fighters who are often EU nationals, in Europe and in its neighbourhood; whereas the EU has condemned these attacks in the strongest terms and has committed itself to combating terrorism alongside the Member States, inside and outside EU territory;
- D. whereas the terrorist threat is significant in the EU, particularly in those Member States that have been or still are militarily engaged in overseas operations in the Middle East and Africa;
- E. whereas the radicalisation of these ‘European fighters’ is a complex and dynamic phenomenon that is based on a series of global, sociological and political factors; whereas it does not correspond to one single profile, and affects men, women, and particularly young European citizens of all social origins, who share the common trait of feeling at odds with society; whereas the causes of radicalisation may equally be socio-economic, ideological, personal or psychological, and, for that reason, it has to be understood in the light of the background of each individual concerned;
- F. whereas, because of terrorism and radicalisation, there is much stereotyping of religions, which in turn is bringing about renewed upsurges of hate crimes and hate speech motivated by racism, xenophobia or intolerance of opinions, beliefs or religions; whereas it must be pointed out that it is the perverse misuse of religion, and not religion per se, that is one of the causes of radicalisation;
- G. whereas radicalisation is not to be associated with any one ideology or faith but may occur within any of them;
- H. whereas combating radicalisation cannot be limited to Islamic radicalisation; whereas religious radicalisation and violent extremism also affect the entire African continent; whereas political radicalisation also affected Europe in 2011, in Norway with the attacks perpetrated by Anders Behring Breivik;
- I. whereas the vast majority of terrorist attacks in EU countries have for years been perpetrated by separatist organisations;
- J. whereas, according to Europol in 2013 there were 152 terrorist attacks in the EU, of which two were ‘religiously motivated’ and 84 were motivated by ethno-nationalist or separatist beliefs, while in 2012 there were 219 terrorist attacks in the EU, of which six were ‘religiously motivated’;
- K. whereas combating terrorism and preventing the radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations still falls essentially within the sphere of competence of the Member States, but European cooperation is essential for the efficient and effective exchange of information between law enforcement agencies in order to combat the cross-border nature of the threat posed by terrorists; whereas a concerted European approach is thus necessary and will provide added value in terms of coordinating or harmonising where appropriate the legislation applying in an area in which European citizens are free to move, and of making prevention and counterterrorism effective; whereas combating trafficking in firearms should be a priority for the EU in fighting serious and organised international crime;

- L. whereas human rights must be at the core of the Union's policies on counterterrorism and prevention of radicalisation, while it must be ensured that the right balance is struck between public safety and respect for fundamental rights, including the rights to security, privacy, and freedom of expression, religion, and association;
- M. whereas Jewish communities are the target of terrorist and anti-Semitic attacks, leading to an increasing perception of insecurity and fear within those communities in Europe;
- N. whereas the rise of terrorism and foreign fighters has increased intolerance towards ethnic and religious communities in several countries in Europe; considering that a holistic approach to fighting discrimination in general and Islamophobia and anti-Semitism in particular, are complementary in relation to working for the specific prevention of terrorist extremism;
- O. whereas a number of instruments already exist in Europe to address the radicalisation of European citizens and whereas the EU and its Member States should make full use of these tools and look to enhancing them in order to reflect the current challenges the EU and Member States face; whereas there remains a perverse reluctance on the part of Member States to cooperate in sensitive areas, such as information and intelligence sharing; whereas, given the increasing significance of terrorist radicalisation, which is in total contradiction with European values, new means must be implemented, and this must take place in compliance with the Charter of Fundamental Rights;
- P. whereas it is essential that in all measures undertaken by the Member States and the EU fundamental rights and civil liberties are respected, namely the right to private life, the right to security, the right to data protection, the presumption of innocence, the right to a fair trial and due process, freedom of expression and freedom of religion; whereas the security of European citizens must preserve their rights and liberties; whereas, indeed, these two principles are two sides of the same coin;
- Q. whereas the extent to which Member States assume responsibility to counteract the risk of radicalisation and the prevention of recruitment by terrorist organisations can vary greatly from one Member State to another; whereas, while some Member States have already taken effective measures, others are lagging behind in their action to tackle this phenomenon;
- R. whereas concerted European action is required as a matter of urgency to prevent the radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations in order to contain this growing phenomenon and thus stem the flow of departures by European citizens to conflict zones, deradicalise the home-stayers, and prevent other terrorist acts from being committed;

- S. whereas this is an international phenomenon and lessons may be learned from many parts of the world;
- T. whereas the important thing now is to put greater emphasis on and invest in preventive rather than reactive measures to address the radicalisation of European citizens and their recruitment by terrorist organisations; whereas a strategy to counter extremism, radicalisation and terrorist recruitment within the EU can only work if it is developed in parallel to a strategy of integration and social inclusion and of reintegration and deradicalisation of so-called ‘foreign fighters’ who are returnees;
- U. whereas certain forms of internet use is conducive to radicalisation, enabling fanatics throughout the world to connect with each other and recruit vulnerable individuals without any physical contact whatsoever and in a manner that is difficult to trace;
- V. whereas it is essential to clearly distinguish behaviour aimed at preparing and/or supporting terrorist attacks or acts by or opinions of extremists that lack the mens rea and actus reus;
- W. whereas terrorist radicalisation appears to be attributable to factors that are both internal and external to the Union;
- X. whereas combating terrorist radicalisation must form part of a global approach that aims to ensure an open Europe and is based on a set of common values;
- Y. whereas youth radicalisation should not be disconnected from its social and political context and must be investigated within the broader scope of sociology of conflict and violence studies;
- Z. whereas the causes of terrorist radicalisation have not been studied to a sufficient extent; whereas lack of integration cannot be perceived as the primary cause of terrorist radicalisation;
- AA. whereas, according to the European Court of Justice, the fact that a person has been a member of an organisation which, because of its involvement in terrorist acts, is on the list forming the Annex to Common Position 2001/931/CFSP and that the person has actively supported the armed struggle waged by that organisation does not automatically constitute a serious reason for considering that the person concerned has committed a ‘serious non-political crime’ or ‘acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations’; on the other hand, where there are serious reasons for considering that a person has committed such a crime or has been guilty of such acts this is conditional on an assessment on a case-by-case basis of the specific facts and on whether individual responsibility for carrying out those acts can be attributed to the person concerned;
- AB. whereas in order to be able to revoke a residence permit granted to a refugee on the ground that the refugee supports such a terrorist organisation, the competent authorities are nevertheless obliged to carry out, under the supervision of the national courts, an individual assessment of the specific facts concerning the actions of both the organisation and the refugee in question;

I. European added value in the prevention of terrorism

1. Emphasises that terrorism cannot and should not be associated with any specific religion, nationality or civilisation;
2. Expresses its concern that, unless the conditions conducive to the spread of terrorism are addressed, the phenomenon of EU citizens travelling to other countries to join jihadist or other extremist groups, as well as the specific security risk they present when returning to the EU and the neighbouring countries, is likely to worsen in the years ahead, especially given the ongoing military escalation in the MENA region; calls for a comprehensive study on the effectiveness of national and EU measures aimed at preventing and combating terrorism;
3. Calls on the Commission to establish as a priority an action plan to implement and evaluate the EU strategy for combating radicalisation and recruitment to terrorism, on the basis of the exchange of best practice and the pooling of skills within the European Union, the evaluation of measures undertaken in the Member States and cooperation with third countries and international organisations, on a basis of full respect for international human rights conventions and through a multistakeholder and multisectoral participative and consultative approach; takes the view that the Commission should contribute to and support the development by Member States of an effective and intensive communication strategy on preventing the radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens and of non-EU nationals residing in the EU by terrorist organisations;
4. Calls on the Member States to coordinate their strategies and share the information and experience at their disposal, to implement good practices at both national and European level, to cooperate with a view to taking new steps in combating radicalisation and recruitment to terrorism by updating national prevention policies and putting networks of practitioners in place on the basis of the ten priority areas for action as identified in the EU strategy for combating radicalisation and recruitment to terrorism¹; stresses the importance of fostering and strengthening crossborder cooperation among law enforcement authorities to this regard, and highlights the crucial importance of providing adequate resources and training to police forces working on the ground;
5. Requests the full disclosure of the Council's action plans and guidelines regarding the ongoing EU Strategy for Combating Radicalisation and Recruitment to Terrorism;
6. Considers that the additional protocol to the Council of Europe Convention on the Prevention of Terrorism, as well as resolution 2178 of the UN Security Council, should be made use of by the Member States and the European institutions with a view to agreeing on a common definition for the criminalisation of persons to be considered as 'foreign fighters'; calls on the Commission to carry out in-depth studies of the primary causes, the process, and the various influences and factors which lead to radicalisation with the support of the new Centre of Excellence of the Radicalisation Awareness Network (RAN);
7. Stresses the importance of making the fullest use of existing instruments to prevent and combat the radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations; highlights the importance of using all relevant internal and external instruments in a holistic and comprehensive manner; recommends that the Commission and the Member States make use of available means, particularly under the Internal Security Fund (ISF), via the ISF Police instrument, in order to support projects and measures aimed at preventing radicalisation; stresses the major role which can be played by the RAN and its Centre of Excellence in taking on this objective of counteracting the radicalisation of European citizens in a comprehensive way; requests that this network receive better publicity and visibility among players combating radicalisation;

II. Preventing violent extremism and terrorist radicalisation in prisons

8. Stresses that prisons remain one of several environments which are a breeding ground for the spread of radical and violent ideologies and terrorist radicalisation; calls on the Commission to encourage the exchange of best practices among the Member States in order to counter the increase of terrorist radicalisation in Europe's prisons; encourages Member States to take immediate action against prison overcrowding, which is an acute problem in many Member States which significantly increases the risk of radicalisation and reduces the opportunities for rehabilitation; recalls that public youth protection institutions or detention or rehabilitation centres may also become places of radicalisation for minors, who constitute a particularly vulnerable target;
9. Calls on the Commission to propose guidelines based on best practices on measures to be implemented in European prisons aimed at the prevention of radicalisation and of violent extremism, on a basis of full respect for human rights; points out that the separation of inmates who are found to have adhered to violent extremism or have already been recruited by terrorist organisations by other inmates within their prisons is an effective means of preventing terrorist radicalisation from being imposed by inmates on their fellows through intimidation or other practices, and of containing radicalisation in those institutions; recommends, however, that any such measures should be implemented on a case-by-case basis and should be subject to judicial decision; further recommends that the Commission and Member States examine the evidence and experience concerning the practice of separation in prisons with the objective of containing the spread of radicalisation; is of the view that this assessment must feed into the development of practices in national prison systems; recalls, however, that these measures should be proportionate and in full compliance with the rights of the inmate;
10. Supports the introduction of specialised training for all prison staff, as well as partners operating in the penal system, religious staff and NGO personnel who interact with prisoners, in order to teach them to detect at an early stage, prevent and deal with behaviour tending to radical and extremist behaviour; stresses the importance of appropriately training and recruiting religious, philosophical and secular representatives so that they can not only adequately meet prisoners' cultural and spiritual needs in prisons, but also contribute to countering potential radical discourse;
11. Encourages the establishment of educational programmes with adequate funding in European prisons in order to promote critical thinking, religious tolerance, and reintegration into society of inmates, but also to offer special assistance to those who are young, vulnerable or more susceptible to radicalisation and recruitment by terrorist organisations, and thus on a basis of the utmost respect for the human rights of inmates; considers that accompanying measures should also be offered subsequently to release from prison;

12. Recognizes that central to such efforts is a prison environment which fully respects the human rights of inmates and complies with international and regional standards, including the UN Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners;

III. Preventing online terrorist radicalisation

13. Notes that the internet generates specific challenges given its global and cross-border nature, thus giving rise to legal gaps and jurisdictional conflicts and allowing recruiters and those who are radicalised to communicate remotely and easily from all corners of the world with no physical borders, no need to establish a base, and no need to seek sanctuary in a particular country; recalls that the internet and social networks are significant platforms for the fuelling of radicalisation and fundamentalism, as they facilitate the rapid and large-scale global distribution of hate messages and praise for terrorism; expresses concern at the impact that such messages praising terrorism have especially on younger people, who are particularly vulnerable; underlines the role of education and public awareness campaigns in preventing radicalisation online; affirms its attachment to freedom of expression not only offline but also online, and believes this should underpin all regulatory action regarding the prevention of radicalisation via the internet and social media; notes the dialogue launched at European level with internet companies with a view to preventing the online distribution of illegal content and erasing such content swiftly, in line with EU law and national legislation and in strict compliance with freedom of expression; calls for an effective strategy for the detection and removal of illegal content inciting to violent extremism, while respecting fundamental rights and freedom of expression, and in particular for contributing to the dissemination of effective discourse to counter terrorist propaganda;
14. Recalls that internet companies and service providers have a legal responsibility to cooperate with Member State authorities by deleting any illegal content that spreads violent extremism, expeditiously and with full respect for the rule of law and fundamental rights, including freedom of expression; believes that Member States should consider legal actions against internet companies which refuse to comply with an administrative or judicial request to delete illegal content on their internet platforms; believes that refusal or deliberate failure by internet platforms to cooperate, thus allowing such illegal content to circulate, should be considered an act of complicity that can be equated to criminal intent or neglect and that those responsible should in such cases be brought to justice;
15. Calls on the competent authorities to ensure that websites that incite hatred are monitored more strictly;
16. Is convinced that the internet is an effective platform for spreading the discourse of respect of human rights and opposition to violence; considers that the internet industry and service providers should cooperate with Member State authorities and civil society to promote powerful and attractive narratives to counter hate speech and radicalisation online, which should be based on the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union; calls on the digital platforms to cooperate with the Member States, civil society and organisations whose fields of expertise are terrorist deradicalisation or evaluation of hate speech, in order to take part in spreading prevention messages calling for the development of critical thinking and for a process of deradicalisation, as well as identifying innovative legal ways to counter praise of terrorism and hate speech, thereby making online radicalisation more difficult; calls on the Commission and the Member States to encourage the development of such counter-narratives online, and to work closely with civil society organisations for the purposes of reinforcing the channels for distributing and promoting democratic and non-violent discourse;

17. Supports the implementation of youth awareness programmes concerning online hate speech and the risks that it represents, and of programmes promoting media and internet education; supports the implementation of training programmes with a view to mobilising, training and creating networks of young activists to defend human rights online;
18. Takes the view that building a counter-narrative, including in third countries, is one of the keys to combating the appeal of terrorist groups in the MENA region; calls on the EU to increase its support for initiatives such as the SSCAT (Syria Strategic Communication Advisory Team) and to promote the deployment and financing of projects of this kind in third countries;
19. Considers that the internet industry and service providers, through internet referencing, must henceforth make it possible to promote radicalisation prevention messages aimed at countering messages that praise terrorism; believes that a special European cooperation unit should be created within Europol with a view to sharing good practices in the Member States, while also permanently cooperating with internet operators, in order to highlight messages that oppose hate speech and praise for terrorism, thereby making online radicalisation more difficult; calls on the Commission and the Member States to support the effective use of counter-narratives and mitigation measures via the internet;
20. Supports the introduction of measures enabling all internet users to easily and quickly flag illegal content circulating on the internet and on social media networks and to report it to the competent authorities, including through hotlines, while respecting human rights, especially freedom of expression, and EU and national legislation;
21. Considers that every Member State should set up a special unit tasked with flagging illegal content on the internet and with facilitating the detection and removal of such content; welcomes the creation by Europol of the Internet Referral Unit (IRU), to be responsible for detecting illegal content and supporting Member States in this regard, while fully respecting the fundamental rights of all parties involved; recommends that such units should also cooperate with the EU anti-terrorism coordinator and the European Counter Terrorist Centre within Europol, and with civil society organisations active in this field; further encourages Member States to cooperate with each other and with the relevant EU agencies on these matters;
22. Welcomes the establishment with effect from 1 January 2016 of the European Counter-Terrorism Centre (ECTC), of which the European unit tasked with flagging content will be a part; stresses the need to provide the financial resources required to deliver the additional tasks conferred on Europol in connection with the establishment of the European Counter Terrorist Centre; calls for Parliament to be duly involved in the creation of this centre and in its terms of reference, tasks and finance;

23. Believes that online radicalisation cannot be stamped out without reinforcing the tools available to the EU to combat cybercrime; recommends that the mandate and resources of the European Cybercrime Centre (EC3) should be strengthened alongside those of Europol and Eurojust, so that the EC3 can play an effective role in better detecting and tackling online threats and better identifying the means used by terrorist organisations; recalls the need to have properly trained experts at Europol as well as in the Member States in order to respond to this specific threat; calls on the HR/VP to reorganise the EU Situation Centre (SitCen) and the Intelligence Centre (IntCen) and ensure their coordination with the Anti-Terrorism Coordinator in order to better track online criminal activities and the spread of hate speech related to radicalisation and terrorism; urges the Member States to significantly increase information sharing among themselves and with the relevant EU structures and agencies;
24. Considers that all EU and national measures aimed at preventing the spread of violent extremism among European citizens and their recruitment by terrorist organisations should respect EU fundamental rights and the relevant case law of the European Court of Justice and European Court of Human Rights, including respect for the principle of the presumption of innocence, the principle of legal certainty, the right to a fair and impartial trial, the right of appeal and the principle of non-discrimination;

IV. Preventing radicalisation through education and social inclusion

25. Stresses that schools and education have an important role to play in preventing radicalisation; recalls the crucial role that schools play in helping to promote integration within society and develop critical thinking, and to promote non-discrimination; calls on the Member States to encourage educational establishments to provide courses and academic programmes aimed at strengthening understanding and tolerance, especially with regard to different religions, the history of religions, philosophies and ideologies; stresses the need to teach fundamental values and democratic principles of the Union such as human rights; highlights that it is Member States' duty to guarantee that their education systems respect and promote EU values and principles and that their functioning does not contradict the principles of non-discrimination and integration;
26. Urges the Member States to ensure that educational programmes on internet use exist in every school (at both primary and secondary level), aimed at educating and training responsible, critical and law-abiding internet users;
27. Stresses the importance of empowering teachers to take an active stand against all forms of discrimination and racism; emphasises the essential role of education and of competent and supportive teachers, not only in strengthening social ties, encouraging a sense of belonging, developing knowledge, skills and competences, embedding fundamental values, and enhancing social, civic and intercultural competences, critical thinking and media literacy, but also in helping young people – in close cooperation with their parents and families – to become active, responsible and open-minded members of society; emphasises that schools can build students' resilience to radicalisation by providing a safe environment and time for debating and exploring controversial and sensitive issues; points out that adolescents are a particularly vulnerable group, as they are at a difficult stage in their lives when they are developing their value system and seeking meaning, and are at the same time highly impressionable and easily manipulated; recalls that groups as well as individuals can be radicalised, and recognises that the development of response to individual and to group radicalisation can be different; emphasises the role society has to play in giving young people better prospects and a purpose in life, in particular by means of high-quality education and training; underlines the role of educational institutions in teaching youth to recognise and manage risks and make safer choices, and in promoting a strong sense of belonging, shared community, care support and responsibility for others; stresses the need to use the various opportunities that vocational education and academic courses offer in order to expose young people to the diverse national, regional, religious and ethnic identities existing in Europe;

28. Emphasises that Europe's diversity and its multicultural communities are integral to its social fabric and are an essential cultural asset; considers that any policy for tackling radicalisation must be sensitive and proportionate in order to respect and strengthen the diverse social fabric of communities;
29. Highlights the importance of combining deradicalisation programs with measures such as establishing partnerships with community representatives, investment in social and neighbourhood projects aimed at disrupting economic and geographical marginalisation, and mentoring schemes for alienated and excluded young people considered at risk of radicalisation; recalls that all Member States are obliged to diligently implement EU anti-discrimination instruments and to take effective measures to address discrimination, hate speech and hate crimes as part of the counter-radicalisation strategy;
30. Calls on the Commission to support Member States in carrying out a communication campaign to raise the awareness of young people and of supervisory staff as regards issues of radicalisation; stresses that training and awareness-raising campaigns should give priority to early intervention, in order to protect individuals and avoid any risk of radicalisation; calls on the Member States to provide educational staff with special training and appropriate tools enabling them to detect any worrying changes in behaviour, identify circles of complicity which amplify the phenomenon of radicalisation through imitation, and properly supervise young people who are at risk of being recruited by terrorist organisations; further encourages the Member States to invest in and financially support specialised facilities in the proximity of schools that serve as contact points enabling young people, but also their families and teachers and relevant experts, to engage in extracurricular activities open to families, including psychological counselling; stresses the importance of there being clear guidance in this area so as not to compromise the primary role of teachers, youth workers and others for whom the wellbeing of the individual is the primary concern, since excessive intervention by public authorities could be counterproductive;
31. Points out the opportunities offered to Member States and to media education experts by the 'Creative Europe' programme; notes that the EU's programmes in the areas of education, culture, social activities and sport constitute essential pillars of support for the actions taken by Member States to tackle inequalities and prevent marginalisation; stresses the importance of developing new actions to promote European values in education, as part of the European strategic framework for cooperation in education and training; insists therefore, among other things, on targeting the transmission and practice of civic values throughout the programmes Europe for citizens, Erasmus + and Creative Europe;

32. Stresses that it is vital to engage in an intercultural dialogue with the various communities, leaders and experts, with a view to helping achieve better understanding and prevention of radicalisation; stresses the responsibility and the important role of all religious communities in countering fundamentalism, hate speech and terrorist propaganda; draws the Member States' attention to the issue of the training of religious leaders - which ought, where possible, to take place in Europe – with regard to preventing incitement to hatred and violent extremism in places of worship in Europe, and to ensure that those leaders share European values, and also of training the representatives of religions, philosophies and secular society working inside correctional facilities; notes however, that while places of worship may provide contact points, much of the indoctrination and recruitment process takes place in more informal settings or on the internet;
33. Highlights the crucial importance of making all actors aware of their responsibility to prevent radicalisation, whether at local, national, European or international level; encourages the establishment of close cooperation between all civil society actors at national and local level, and of greater cooperation between actors on the ground, such as associations and NGOs, in order to support victims of terrorism and their families, as well as individuals who have been radicalised and their families; calls, in this regard, for the introduction of training adapted to those actors on the ground and for additional financial support for them; stresses, however, that funding for NGOs and other civil society actors should be separate from financial support for counterterrorism programmes;
34. Considers that civil society and local actors have a crucial role to play in the development of projects adapted to their localities or organisations, in addition to their role as an integrating factor for those European citizens who feel at odds with society and are tempted by terrorist radicalisation; believes it essential to raise awareness among and inform and train frontline workers (teachers, educationalists, police officers, child protection workers and workers in the healthcare sector) in order to strengthen local capacity to combat radicalisation; feels that the Member States should support the establishment of structures facilitating, in particular, the guidance of young people, as well as exchanges with families, schools, hospitals, universities, etc; recalls that such measures can only be implemented through long-term social investment programmes; notes that associations and organisations in this field, which do not bear the mark of governments, can achieve excellent results in the reintegration into society of citizens who had been on the path to radicalisation;
35. Considers it vital to set up an alert system for assistance and guidance in every Member State which would allow families and community members to obtain support or to easily and swiftly flag the development of sudden behavioural change that might signal a process of terrorist radicalisation or an individual's departure to join a terrorist organisation; notes that in this regard, 'hotlines' have been successful and are enabling the reporting of persons among friends and families suspected of being radicalised, but are also helping friends and families to deal with this destabilising situation; calls on the Member States to look into the possibility of establishing such a system;

36. Stresses that recent research points to the growing number of young women who have been radicalised and recruited by terrorist organisations, providing evidence of their role in violent extremism; considers that the EU and the Member States should take gender into account at least to some extent in developing strategies for the prevention of radicalisation; calls on the Commission to support generalised programmes aiming to engage young women in their endeavours for greater equality and to provide support networks through which they can safely have their voices heard;
37. Stresses the importance of the role of women in the prevention of radicalisation within family units;

V. Stepping up the exchange of information on terrorist radicalisation in Europe

38. Reiterates its commitment to work towards the finalisation of an EU directive on passenger name records (PNR) by the end of 2015 and to guarantee that such a directive will be compliant with fundamental rights and free from any discriminatory practices based on ideological, religious or ethnic stigmatisation, and will fully respect the data protection rights of EU citizens; recalls, however, that the EU PNR directive will be just one measure in the fight against terrorism, and that a holistic, ambitious and comprehensive strategy on counterterrorism and the fight against organised crime, involving foreign policy, social policy, education policy, law enforcement and justice, is required to prevent the recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations;
39. Calls on the Commission to enhance the EU's expertise regarding the prevention of radicalisation by establishing a European network that incorporates the information provided by RAN and by the Policy Planner's Network on Polarisation and Radicalisation (PPN), as well as that provided by experts specialised in a wide array of disciplines across the social sciences;
40. Insists on the absolute necessity of stepping up the expedient and effective exchange of relevant information between the law enforcement authorities in the Member States and between Member States and the relevant agencies, in particular by optimising the use of and contributions to the Schengen Information System (SIS) and Visa Information System (VIS), Europol's secure information exchange network application (SIENA) and Europol's 'Focal Point Travellers' on European citizens who have been radicalised; stresses that stepping up the exchange of information between law enforcement authorities will entail increasing trust between Member States, as well as reinforcing the role and the effective resourcing of EU entities such as Europol, Eurojust and the European Police College (Cepol);
41. Calls for the EU to include the issue of terrorist radicalisation in the training provided by Cepol;
42. Stresses the importance of implementing a specialised European training programme for those working in the justice system, to raise their awareness of the different forms of radicalisation;

43. Stresses that improved cooperation between Member States aimed at countering the radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens is also characterised by intensive exchanges and cooperation between their judicial authorities and with Eurojust; notes that better reporting at European level on the criminal records of terrorist suspects would help speed up their detection and make it easier for them to be properly monitored, either when they leave or when they return to the EU; encourages, therefore, the reform and better use of the European Criminal Records Information System (ECRIS); urges the Commission to assess the feasibility and added value of establishing a European Police Records Index System (EPRIS); underlines that international treaties and the EU law, as well as fundamental rights, and in particular the protection of personal data, must be respected in such information exchanges;

VI. Strengthening deterrents against terrorist radicalisation

44. Believes that measures aimed at preventing the radicalisation of European citizens and their recruitment by terrorist organisations will not be fully effective until they are accompanied by an effective, dissuasive and articulated range of criminal justice measures in all Member States; considers that through effectively criminalising terrorist acts carried out abroad with terrorist organisations the Member States will equip themselves with the tools needed to eliminate terrorist radicalisation among European citizens while making full use of the existing EU police and judicial cooperation tools in criminal matters; considers that law enforcement and justice authorities (judges and prosecutors) should have sufficient capacity to prevent, detect and prosecute those acts, and should be adequately and continuously trained on terrorism-related crimes;
45. Calls for reinforced capacities for Eurojust's Coordination Centre, which should play a critical role in promoting the joint action of Member States' judicial authorities in the collection of evidence and enhance the effectiveness of prosecutions of crimes related to terrorism; is, in this regard, of the view that more use should be made of the Joint Investigation Teams instrument, both among Member States and between Member States and third countries with which Eurojust has established cooperation agreements;
46. Notes that prosecuting terrorist acts carried out in third countries by European citizens or by non-EU nationals residing in the EU requires that the collection of evidence in third countries should be possible, on a basis of full compliance with human rights; calls, therefore for the EU to work on the setting-up of judicial and law enforcement cooperation agreements with third countries to facilitate the collection of evidence in said countries, provided that strict legal standards and procedures, the rule of law, international law and fundamental rights are safeguarded by all parties;
47. Welcomes the deployment of security/counterterrorism experts in a number of key EU delegations, with a view to strengthening their capacity to contribute to European counterterrorism efforts and to liaising more effectively with relevant local authorities, while further building up counterterrorism capacity within the European External Action Service (EEAS);
48. Encourages, therefore, the establishment of cooperation agreements between Eurojust and third countries, on the lines of those already established with the US, Norway and Switzerland, while stressing nevertheless the need to ensure full compliance with international human rights law and EU data protection and privacy rules; points out that priority in establishing such agreements should be given to countries that are also particularly hit by terrorism, such as MENA countries; additionally, is of the view that the deployment of Eurojust liaison prosecutors in the relevant countries, especially in the southern neighbourhood, would promote more exchange of information and would enable better cooperation in order to effectively fight terrorism while respecting human rights;

VII. Preventing the departure and anticipating the return of radicalised European citizens recruited by terrorist organisations

49. Reiterates that the EU should improve the effectiveness of its external border controls, on a basis of full compliance with fundamental rights; calls, in this respect, on the Member States to make good use of existing instruments such as the SIS and the VIS, including with reference to stolen, lost and falsified passports; also considers that, to this end, one of the EU's priorities must be to better enforce the Schengen Code;
50. Calls on the Member States to share good practices with regard to exit and return checks and the freezing of financial assets of citizens, in the context of preventing citizens from taking part in terrorist activities in conflict areas in third countries and of how to manage their return to the EU; stresses in particular that Member States should be enabled to confiscate the passports of their citizens planning to join terrorist organisations, at the request of the competent judicial authority, according to their national laws and in full compliance with the principle of proportionality; considers that the restriction of someone's freedom of movement, which is a fundamental right, can only be decided if the necessity and proportionality of the measure are properly evaluated by a judicial authority; further supports criminal proceedings against suspects of terrorism who become involved in terrorist activities on their return to Europe;
51. Calls for international contributions to the funding mechanism endorsed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to facilitate the immediate stabilisation of areas cleared of Da'esh;
52. Calls on the VP/HR and the Council to find a clear language of condemnation for the decade-long financial and ideological support provided by some governments and influential individuals in the Gulf countries for extremist Islamist movements; calls on the Commission to review the EU's relations with third countries in order to more effectively combat material and immaterial support for terrorism; recalls that, in the context of the current revision of the European Neighbourhood Policy (ENP), the security dimension and the capacity of ENP tools to contribute to improving partners' resilience and their capabilities to provide for their own security, on a basis of respect for the rule of law, must be strengthened;
53. Reiterates that making good use of existing instruments such as the SIS, SIS II and VIS systems, Interpol's SLTD system, and Europol's Focal Point TRAVELLERS constitutes the first step in stepping up external border security in order to identify EU citizens and foreigners residing in the EU who may be leaving or returning from a conflict area for the purpose of committing terrorist acts or may receive terrorist training or take part in non-conventional armed conflict on behalf of terrorist organisations; urges Member States to improve cooperation and sharing of information regarding suspected ‘foreign fighters’ with Member States at the EU’s external borders;

54. Invites the Member States to ensure effective monitoring, particularly psychological, of foreign fighters on their return to Europe;
55. Is seriously convinced that any policymaking in the field of terrorism and radicalisation needs to pool the expertise and assets of the internal and external dimensions of EU policy; believes, in this regard, that it is on the basis of such a holistic approach that an adequate response may be designed to fight terrorism and terrorist recruitment in the EU and its neighbourhood; calls, therefore, on both the Commission and the EEAS, under the leadership and guidance of both the HR/VP and the First Vice-President of the Commission and with the support of the Anti-Terrorism Coordinator, to work together in designing a policy approach that effectively combines the tools of social policy (including employment, integration and anti-discrimination), humanitarian aid, development, conflict resolution, crisis management, trade, energy and any other policy area that might have an internal/external dimension;

VIII. Strengthening links between internal and external security in the EU

56. Stresses the vital importance of the EU Union establishing close cooperation with third countries, notably transit countries and destination countries, insofar as this is possible, in order to be able to identify EU citizens and non-European residents leaving to fight for terrorist organisations or returning thereafter; also stresses the need to strengthen political dialogue and shared action plans to combat radicalisation and terrorism, in the context of bilateral relations and with regional organisations such as the African Union and the League of Arab States;
57. Welcomes with enthusiasm VP/HR Mogherini’s willingness to support projects for countering radicalisation in third countries, including Jordan, Lebanon and Iraq and the Sahel/Maghreb region, as stated in the report on the implementation of measures following the European Council meeting of 12 February 2015; stresses that it must now be ensured that these projects receive the necessary funding as soon as possible;
58. Calls on the EU to increase its cooperation with regional partners in order to curb arms trafficking, targeting in particular the countries where terrorism originates, and to follow closely the export of armaments that could be exploited by terrorists; also calls for foreign policy tools and engagement with third countries to be strengthened with a view to countering the financing of terrorist organisations;
59. Encourages the EU to conduct targeted and upgraded security and counter-terrorism dialogues with Algeria, Egypt, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Morocco, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia and the Gulf Cooperation Council; also believes that cooperation with Turkey should be enhanced in line with the General Affairs Council conclusions of December 2014;
60. Calls on the Council to keep the EU Regional Strategy for Syria and Iraq and the Counter-Terrorism/Foreign Fighters Strategy, adopted on 16 March 2015, under constant review and development in the light of the developing security situation in the EU's southern neighbourhood, alongside preventive and other initiatives such as the Commission's RAN; calls further on the Member States to promote common respect and understanding as crucial elements within the framework of the fight against terrorism, both within the EU and in its Member States, as well as in third countries;

61. Is convinced that for such enhanced cooperation to be established, the Commission, and the EEAS in particular, need to make greater efforts in terms of increasing and improving expertise in the areas of fighting terrorism, non-conventional armed conflict and radicalisation, and also to reinforce and diversify language skills, for instance for Arabic, Urdu, Russian and Mandarin, given that such skills are currently seriously lacking in the European information and intelligence services; considers it essential that the EU's call to combat terrorism, radicalisation and violence can be heard beyond its own borders, through strategic communication that is both incisive and effective;
62. Supports greater international cooperation and information-sharing on the part of national intelligence services in order to identify EU citizens who are at risk of becoming radicalised and being recruited and travelling to join jihadist or other extremist groups; stresses that countries in the MENA region and the Western Balkans must be supported in their efforts to stem the flow of foreign fighters;
63. Acknowledges that radicalisation and recruitment of individuals by terrorist networks is a global phenomenon; believes that the response to this phenomenon ought to be international and not just local or European; considers it necessary, therefore, to strengthen cooperation with third countries to identify recruitment networks and increase security at the borders of the countries concerned; reiterates also that cooperation with key partners that are facing similar challenges has to be stepped up through diplomatic, political dialogue and intelligence cooperation;
64. Reiterates that the global reach of terrorism requires an effective and united international response in order to successfully prevent the trafficking of weapons to countries that threaten international peace and security;
65. Welcomes the Commission's allocation in April 2015 of a budget of EUR 10 million to finance a programme of assistance to partner countries to counter radicalisation in the Sahel/Maghreb and stem the flow of foreign fighters from North Africa, the Middle East and the Western Balkans (a first tranche of EUR 5 million to fund technical assistance to enhance the capacities of criminal justice officials to investigate, prosecute and adjudicate cases of foreign fighters or would-be foreign fighters; a second tranche of EUR 5 million to finance the countering of radicalisation programmes in the Sahel/Maghreb);

IX. Promoting the exchange of good practices on deradicalisation

66. Considers that a comprehensive policy to preventing the radicalisation and recruitment of EU citizens by terrorist organisations can only be successfully put in place if accompanied by proactive deradicalisation and inclusion policies; calls for the EU, therefore, to facilitate the sharing by Member States and with third countries which have already acquired experience and achieved positive results in this area of good practice on the setting-up of deradicalisation structures to prevent EU citizens and non-EU nationals legally residing in the EU from leaving the EU or to control their return to it; recalls the need to offer support to the families of such individuals as well;

67. Suggests that Member States examine the idea of including mentors or counselling assistants in the process of deradicalising EU citizens who have returned from conflict areas disillusioned by what they experienced there, so as to support them in their reintegration into society through appropriate programmes; underlines the need for better exchange of best practices among Member States in that respect; stresses that mentors should be willing to contribute to specific programmes through appropriate training;
68. Calls for an EU-level structured communication campaign to be launched, making use of the cases of former European 'foreign fighters' who have successfully undergone deradicalisation and whose traumatic experiences help expose the deeply perverse and fallacious religious dimension of joining terrorist organisations such as ISIS; encourages Member States, therefore, to develop platforms enabling face-to-face meetings and dialogue with former fighters; emphasises furthermore that contact with victims of terrorism also seems to be an effective means of stripping radical rhetoric of its religious or ideological significance; suggests that this campaign be used as a tool to assist in the deradicalisation process in prisons, schools and all establishments focusing on prevention and rehabilitation; further calls on the Commission to support, particularly through funding, and coordinate such national communication campaigns;

X. Dismantling terrorist networks

69. Underlines that money laundering, tax evasion and other fiscal crimes are in some cases major sources of terrorism funding which threaten our internal security, and that tracking and combating crimes affecting the EU's financial interests must therefore be a priority;
70. Supports measures aimed at weakening terrorist organisations from the inside and lessening their current influence on EU citizens and non-EU nationals legally residing in the EU; urges the Commission and the competent agencies to look into ways of dismantling terrorist networks and identifying how they are funded; to this end, calls for better cooperation between the Financial Intelligence Units of the Member States and for the speedy transposition and implementation of the Anti-Money Laundering Package; encourages the Commission to propose a regulation on identifying and blocking terrorism funding channels and countering the ways in which they are funded; calls on the Commission, therefore, to re-evaluate the creation of a common European terrorist finance tracking system; encourages Member States to implement the highest standards of transparency concerning access to information on beneficiary owners of all corporate structures in the EU and in opaque jurisdictions which may be vehicles for financing terrorist organisations;
71. Welcomes the recent adoption of the European Agenda on Security, which proposes important steps towards enhancing the fight against terrorism and radicalisation, such as the creation of the European Counter Terrorist Centre within Europol; calls on the Member States to make full use of existing measures, and calls on the Commission to flag sufficient financial and human resources to effectively deliver on its proposed actions;

72. Calls for a harmonised approach to the definition as a criminal offence of hate speech, online and offline, whereby radicals incite others to disrespect and violate fundamental rights; suggests that this specific offence be added in the relevant Council framework decisions;
73. Calls on the Member States to participate in efforts to trace external flows of funding and to ensure and display transparency in their relations with certain Gulf countries, with the aim of stepping up cooperation in order to shed light on the financing of terrorism and fundamentalism, in Africa and the Middle East but also by some organisations in Europe; believes that Member States should not hesitate to use restrictive measures against individuals and organisations where there is credible evidence of financing of or other complicity with terrorism;
74. Would strongly reject any attempts to remove aspects of the report that focus on fighting acts of terrorism and extremism in their own right; takes the view that it is unhelpful and counter-productive to break the link between fighting radicalisation and fighting its manifestations; calls on the Council to create a blacklist of European jihadists and jihadist terrorist suspects;
75. Instructs its President to forward this resolution to the Council, the Commission, the governments and parliaments of the EU Member States and the candidate countries, the United Nations, the Council of Europe, the African Union, and the member states of the Union for the Mediterranean, of the League of Arab States and of the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

The terrorist attacks at the start of 2015 highlighted the urgency with which the European Union needed to take action on combating terrorism and preventing the radicalisation of its citizens.

While it may have been the tragedies at the start of 2015 that convinced the EU institutions, as well as the Member States, to become more involved in preventing radicalisation, calls for such a step have been heard for a long time now. Member States still have core competence in combating the radicalisation of EU citizens. However, a concerted EU approach is needed to be effective in combating the threat posed by radicalised EU citizens who may move freely around the European Union.

Although it is difficult to arrive at a firm figure, it is now estimated that over 5 000 EU citizens have left to fight for terrorist organisations in Iraq and Syria. While some Member States are far more affected by this phenomenon than others, the whole of the European Union is concerned by the challenges and questions these ‘foreign fighters’ raise.

The radicalisation of EU citizens, which may go as far as their departure to fight for terrorist organisations such as ISIS, poses a genuine security threat to the European Union, its Member States and neighbouring countries.

The quickening pace of this phenomenon means that repressive measures are no longer sufficient. The European Union has to adopt a new strategy based more on prevention. This report will therefore stress a proactive attitude to preventing the radicalisation and recruitment of EU citizens by terrorist organisations.

The aim of the report will be to make recommendations on an EU strategy to prevent the radicalisation and recruitment of EU citizens. To achieve this, the different vectors behind radicalisation need to be analysed. A study of the methods used to recruit new ‘foreign fighters’ should make it possible to propose efficacious solutions for each sector and each platform encouraging radicalisation.

This is why an inclusive approach has to be adopted in order to present a thorough analysis of the radicalisation and recruitment of EU citizens.

This report deals with preventing the radicalisation and recruitment of EU citizens by terrorist organisations. It does not repeat the list of EU’s anti-terrorism measures, but instead shares new ideas on how to prevent security threats and abuses within the EU.

The rapporteur wishes however to reiterate the commitment to protection of fundamental freedoms. Proposals made by Parliament will not, under any circumstance, call into question the respect for fundamental rights and freedoms, and freedom of speech in particular, enjoyed by EU citizens. The rapporteur will ensure that the recommendations contained in this report observe the proportionality principle and that none of the proposals made in this report go beyond what is necessary to achieve the goal stated. The rapporteur sets great store, moreover, by observance of the principle of subsidiarity.

OPINION OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

for the Committee on Civil Liberties, Justice and Home Affairs

on the prevention of radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations
(2015/2063(INI))

Rapporteur: Charles Tannock

SUGGESTIONS

The Committee on Foreign Affairs calls on the Committee on Civil Liberties, Justice and Home Affairs, as the committee responsible, to incorporate the following suggestions into its motion for a resolution:

1. Believes that enhanced and more effective international cooperation, with a commitment to core EU values and norms such as human rights, the rule of law and the principles of international law, active exchange of views and information, determined national action against poverty and inequality, and stable inclusive government in third countries is crucial to deterring and countering the threat posed by terrorist groups and stemming the radicalisation of European citizens;
2. Encourages the Member States to cooperate and consistently support each other's efforts to counter violent extremism, including by coordinating plans and efforts and sharing lessons learned; expresses the need to improve checks at the external borders of the Schengen Area;
3. Encourages the EU to further develop guidelines and principles for fighting terrorism based on the relevant UN Security Council resolutions (in particular UNSCR 2178/2014);
4. Calls for international contributions to the funding mechanism endorsed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to facilitate the immediate stabilisation of areas cleared of Da'esh;
5. Expresses concern that, unless the conditions conducive to the spread of terrorism are addressed, the phenomenon of EU citizens travelling to other countries to join jihadist or other extremist groups, as well as the specific security risk they present when returning to the EU and the neighbouring countries, is likely to worsen in the years ahead, especially given the ongoing military escalation in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) region; calls for a comprehensive study on the effectiveness of national and EU measures aimed at preventing and combating terrorism;

6. Emphasises that terrorism cannot and should not be associated with any religion, nationality or civilisation;
7. Encourages the development of preventive and regularly reviewed security, counter-terrorism and de-radicalisation initiatives at Member State, EU and international level; encourages better coordination of internal and external policies with a view to ensuring appropriate responses to emerging threats; encourages increasing its counter-terrorism cooperation with neighbouring countries and regional actors; acknowledges that radicalisation is also a geopolitical and neighbourhood-policy-related issue; recalls that all financial aid should be assessed as to its potential supporting impact on terrorist activities, and urges that the sources of all external funding be ascertained;
8. Encourages the EU to engage more with third countries with a view to putting measures in place to deter and disrupt the travel of foreign fighters, including through new capacity-building projects (e.g. border controls) with partners and better targeted EU assistance, including by drawing up action plans in the field of anti-terrorism; stresses that human rights must be at the core of the counter-terrorism strategies; wishes for the EU to strengthen its political dialogue with the League of Arab States, the Organisation of Islamic Cooperation, the African Union and other relevant regional actors and coordination structures, such as the G5 Sahel; calls on the EU to follow closely the export of armaments that could be exploited by terrorists;
9. Enthusiastically welcomes VP/HR Mogherini's willingness to support projects for countering radicalisation in third countries, namely Jordan, Lebanon and Iraq, and in the Sahel-Maghreb, as stated in the report on the implementation of measures following the European Council meeting of 12 February 2015; notes that it must now be ensured that these projects receive the necessary funding as soon as possible;
10. Calls on the EU to increase its cooperation with regional partners in order to curb arms trafficking, targeting in particular the countries where terrorism originates, and to follow closely the export of armaments that could be exploited by terrorists; calls also for foreign policy tools and engagement with third countries to be strengthened with a view to countering the financing of terrorist organisations;
11. Encourages the EU to conduct targeted and upgraded security and counter-terrorism dialogues with Algeria, Egypt, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Morocco, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia and the Gulf Cooperation Council; cooperation with Turkey should also be enhanced in line with the General Affairs Council conclusions of December 2014;
12. Calls on the Council to keep the EU Regional Strategy for Syria and Iraq and the Counter-Terrorism/Foreign Fighters Strategy, adopted on 16 March 2015, under constant review and development in the light of the developing security situation in the EU's southern neighbourhood, alongside preventive and other initiatives such as the Commission's Radicalisation Awareness Network; calls further on the Member States to promote common respect and understanding as crucial elements within the framework of the fight against terrorism both within the EU and in its Member States, as well as in third countries;

13. Calls on the VP/HR and the Council to find a clear language of condemnation for the decade-long financial and ideological support by some governments and influential individuals in the Gulf countries for extremist Islamist movements; calls on the Commission to review the EU's relations with third countries in order to more effectively combat material and immaterial support for terrorism; recalls that, in the context of the current revision of the ENP, the security dimension and the capacity of ENP tools to contribute to improving partners resilience and capabilities to provide for their own security with respect for the rule of law must be strengthened;
14. Notes that the root causes of terrorism can often be found in poor and non-inclusive governance; believes that in order to achieve long-term progress, international efforts should aim at promoting the rule of law, democratic principles and human rights; stresses the importance of incorporating such aims into the EU's cooperation agreements with third countries; encourages the EU to launch further capacity-building projects and activities with interested MENA countries, addressing law enforcement, criminal justice and security sector reform in close cooperation with Europol, Eurojust, Frontex and CEPOL; considers it increasingly urgent to conduct dialogue with moderate Islam opposed to extremism and encourage cultural cooperation;
15. Supports greater international cooperation and information-sharing from national intelligence services to identify EU citizens who are at risk of becoming radicalised, being recruited and travelling to join jihadist and other extremist groups; stresses that countries in the MENA region and the Western Balkans must be supported in their efforts to stem the flow of foreign fighters;
16. Calls on the Commission to mobilise all its resources on its own account and in support of Member States in addressing the underlying factors of radicalisation and extremism, designing prevention strategies which encompass the fields of education, social integration, the fight against discrimination, and intercultural and interreligious dialogue; recommends closer collaboration with organisations for cultural dialogue; stresses the importance of working together with moderate leaders in the Muslim community, including with representatives of civil society, both within the EU and in third countries, to combat radicalisation; calls on the global community of religious leaders to launch another Interfaith Summit, along the lines of the one in Assisi in 2011; considers that the EU and its Member States should improve the monitoring of EU citizens' activities in the affected countries; invites the VP/HR and the Commission to continue to ensure sufficient funds and coherent use of instruments to address the threats of terrorism and more effectively from early warning to early action;
17. Takes the view that building a counter-narrative, including in third countries, is one of the keys to combating the appeal of terrorist groups in the MENA region; calls on the Union to increase its support for initiatives such as the SSCAT (Syria Strategic Communication Advisory Team) and to promote the deployment and financing of projects of this kind in third countries;
18. Welcomes the deployment of security/counter-terrorism experts in a number of key EU Delegations with a view to strengthening their capacity to contribute to European counter-terrorism efforts and to liaising more effectively with relevant local authorities, while further building up counter-terrorism capacity within the European External Action

Service (EEAS);

19. Encourages the development of programmes that seek to defuse both violent and sectarian confrontations; believes that de-radicalisation programmes can be important tools for reducing recruitment of EU citizens by terrorist organisations; notes that some Member States are assessing the potential for recruiting former foreign fighters to assist in de-radicalisation programmes; calls on the Member States to reassess the introduction of such programmes;
20. Strongly welcomes the report's recommendation to Member States to segregate radicalised inmates within the penal system; urges caution, however, in doing so en masse for fear of allowing known radicals to coalesce and form contacts that may be potentially damaging upon their release; calls on the Commission to develop plans to facilitate the reintegration of people at risk of being recruited and for those who have been able to return;
21. Points out that a comprehensive EU prevention strategy must also make full use of foreign policy to promote respect for human rights, democracy, freedom of religion and good governance and to prevent and resolve conflicts in order to shrink the space for extremist propaganda;
22. Emphasises that the EU and its Member States need to build in sufficient safeguards in counter-terrorism cooperation mechanisms in order to ensure that security, human rights and law enforcement are not mutually exclusive but complementary and are based on the rule of law and respect for fundamental rights of citizens of the EU and its partner countries; calls on the Member States to investigate ways of bringing the education and training of religious leaders under state monitoring and more formally institutionalising religious teaching in order to prevent extremists from taking hold; recognises the need for internationally coordinated media monitoring aimed at restricting access to terrorist propaganda and improving the process for public reporting of extremist content online; calls for the setting up of websites or hotline contact points for citizens in order to support positive-narrative and awareness-raising campaigns against online and offline radicalisation;
23. Believes that it is important to take a holistic approach in addressing and tackling the root causes of radicalisation in Europe; stresses that challenging the ideological narrative underpinning the actions of extremist groups and building a counter-narrative is one of the keys to combating the appeal of terrorist groups; expresses concern that relations between communities are being put under increasing strain across Europe and encourages inter-faith dialogue; welcomes the report's references to the issue of training religious leaders in order to prevent hate preachers; calls on the Member States to criminalise terrorist acts that occur outside of their jurisdiction, and agrees that this is one of the most effective tools for fighting terrorism and extremism; calls on imams and Muslim leaders to take the lead in the efforts against radicalisation and hate speech by countering fundamentalism and terrorism propaganda with a theologically based narrative; calls on the EU to support research and information projects on countering fundamentalism and on de-radicalisation by intensifying dialogue with Muslim communities with the aim of converging our efforts;
24. Notes that there is a need to cooperate more closely with non-EU countries in order to more effectively identify EU citizens leaving to fight for terrorist organisations and returning thereafter; similarly supports the report's calls for the EEAS to increase the teaching of Arabic to its officials in order to support such aims;

25. Underlines that the EU and countries in the Western Balkans, Turkey, the Gulf countries and other Arab states should make joint efforts to fight against radicalisation and recruitment, to trace terrorist financing and to develop a new narrative against Islamist fundamentalism; stresses that counter-terrorism cooperation and information-sharing should be key elements in EU relations with those countries; emphasises that it is also essential to strengthen such cooperation with regional organisations such as the Arab League, the African Union and the Gulf Cooperation Council;
26. Would strongly reject any attempts to remove aspects of the report that focus on fighting acts of terrorism and extremism in their own right; takes the view that it is unhelpful and counter-productive to break the link between fighting radicalisation and fighting the manifestations of it; calls on the Council to set up a black list of European jihadists and jihadist terrorist suspects.

OPINION OF THE COMMITTEE ON CULTURE AND EDUCATION

for the Committee on Civil Liberties, Justice and Home Affairs

on the prevention of radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations
(2015/2063(INI))

Rapporteur: Angel Dzhambazki

SUGGESTIONS

The Committee on Culture and Education calls on the Committee on Civil Liberties, Justice and Home Affairs, as the committee responsible, to incorporate the following suggestions into its motion for a resolution:

1. Recalls the Paris Declaration adopted by the EU Education Ministers on 17 March 2015, calling for enhanced cooperation by Member States to promote a framework of equal opportunities, respect for human dignity, freedom, including freedom of expression, democracy, human rights, equality, the rule of law, social inclusion, and active citizenship through personal development and education at all levels, in particular of those from a disadvantaged background; recalls that it is the EU's responsibility to respect the fundamental rights, freedoms and security of its citizens, as enshrined in the EU Charter on Fundamental Rights, including freedom of expression and information, assembly and association, and respect for linguistic, cultural, and religious diversity;
2. Takes the view that the prevention of the radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations is part of a series of measures that cover numerous areas and aim to promote security, justice and equal opportunities for all; reaffirms that other factors that may be conducive to the radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations include, in particular, inequality, marginalisation, social exclusion and difficult access to quality education;
3. Stresses the importance of investing in lifelong learning programmes, both as a preventive measure against radicalisation and as an instrument of choice for de-radicalising individuals;
4. Notes that the prevention of terrorism and countering all types of radicalisation is one of the key priorities within the European Agenda for Security, but regrets that despite the recent reforms Europe is still unable to adequately respond to these new challenges;

stresses therefore the need for a multifaceted approach to address the cultural, economic, social and political root causes that foster terrorism; underlines the crucial role of early identification of people at risk of being exposed to radicalisation and emphasises that responsible social and educational institutions should be adequately equipped through training to perform these tasks; highlights the need to make all actors aware of their responsibility to prevent radicalisation, whether at local, national, European or international level; reiterates the fundamental role of dialogue and cooperation between all actors in both formal and non-formal education (e.g. families, parents, teachers and associations), as well as culture and sport; points out the need for specialist training for teachers who can serve as role models and guiding figures, the importance of social and youth policies, alternative leisure activities, lifelong learning, and interfaith and intercultural dialogue to prevent radicalisation leading to violent extremism;

5. Notes the importance of empowering teachers to take an active stand against all forms of discrimination and racism; notes the essential role of education and competent and supportive teachers in not only strengthening social ties, encouraging a sense of belonging, developing knowledge, skills, competences, embedding fundamental values, enhancing social, civic and intercultural competences, critical thinking and media literacy but also in helping young people – in close cooperation with their parents and families – to become active, responsible, open-minded members of society; emphasises that schools can build students' resilience to radicalisation by providing a safe environment and time for debating and exploring controversial and sensitive issues; points out that adolescents are a particularly vulnerable group, as they are at a difficult stage in their lives when they are developing their value system and seeking meaning, and are at the same time highly impressionable and easily manipulated; recalls that groups as well as individuals can be radicalised, and recognises that the development and response to individual and group radicalisation can be different; emphasises the role society has to play in giving young people better prospects and a purpose in life, in particular by means of high-quality education and training; underlines the role of educational institutions in teaching youth to recognise and manage risk and make safer choices, and in promoting a strong sense of belonging, shared community, care support and responsibility for others; stresses the need to use the various opportunities vocational education and academic courses offer in order to expose young people to the diverse national, regional, religious and ethnic identities in Europe;
6. Notes that young people without opportunities and jobs have time on their hands and are more vulnerable and more likely to be attracted to the perceived excitement of recruitment by terrorist organisations;
7. Highlights that action to tackle radicalisation must also focus on social inclusion and empowerment in vulnerable communities, promoting community engagement through dialogue, encouraging and cultivating active citizenship, and reinforcing the role of grass roots civil society organisations; calls on the Commission and the Member States to share best practices, formulate recommendations, and develop networks at local, national, and European level in order to provide a positive social response to radicalisation along these lines;
8. Stresses that the initial stages of radicalisation are marked by the isolation of individuals, in particular from family and school; underlines the importance of suitable communication between parents, teachers and the authorities to detect signs of radicalisation in young people;

9. Emphasises that Europe's diversity and its multicultural communities are integral to its social fabric and are an essential cultural asset; holds that any policy on tackling radicalisation must be sensitive and proportionate, so as to respect and strengthen the diverse social fabric of communities;
10. Expresses concern that counterterrorism and anti-radicalisation policies run the risk of limiting freedom of expression, either directly or through a chilling effect; notes that the definition of such terms as radicalisation or extremism must be set out clearly and in detail, so as to prevent any negative impact of these policies on legitimate expression; stresses that a diversity of voices is needed in communities vulnerable to radicalisation, so that moderate and progressive ideas and narratives can overcome extremism, and as such a diversity of views should be encouraged in open debate;
11. Calls on the Member States to promote in their educational systems an intercultural approach to allow for reciprocal knowledge and mutual respect in the sharing of common values;
12. Stresses the importance of the role of women in the prevention of radicalisation within family units;
13. Highlights the importance of interfaith and intercultural dialogue as a tool for social cohesion and inclusion, mediation and reconciliation;
14. Recognises the importance of, and supports, meetings and public dialogue between different key religious figures, which can contribute significantly to overcoming stereotypes and phobias relating to individual religions;
15. Notes with concern the use of the internet and social media for the dissemination of propaganda material and recruitment by terrorist organisations; encourages active cooperation between the Member States, the EU and all the relevant stakeholders to combat the dissemination of radicalising material and propaganda on the internet; calls for the implementation of youth awareness programmes on online hate speech and the risks that it represents and of programmes promoting media and internet education; underlines therefore the need both to develop innovative online counter-communication with Member States that is also able to stimulate critical digital judgement skills among all vulnerable internet users and to develop technologies which could pre-emptively curb and combat this phenomenon; emphasises the crucial role of all the relevant stakeholders in developing and disseminating effective counter-messages; stresses the role of education in helping young people to understand and accept differences of opinion, of conviction, of belief and of lifestyle, while respecting diversity and the rule of law, in promoting critical thinking and good judgement so that, particularly in the context of the internet and social media, they are able to grasp reality, to distinguish fact from opinion, to recognise propaganda, and to resist all forms of indoctrination, hate speech and online extremism; encourages the Member States and stakeholders to agree upon common standards of journalism ethics in order to fight hate speech in media materials and in online commentaries of the general public;

16. Stresses that increasing engagement with young people, including through educational exchanges and other networks, is a core element aimed at building bridges, overcoming prejudice and fostering religious dialogue and respect for cultural diversity; is of the opinion that cross-cutting action programmes based on alternative education and the cultural interface, noting the existing cultural diversity and the need for this to be understood, can play a major role in developing a common vision of the future based on respect for human rights and dignity, international standards and the values on which the EU is built;
17. Emphasises the need to direct efforts towards helping young people develop their own identity, sense of self-worth, community spirit and acceptance of multicultural and multinational societies, given that young people who are searching for an identity and a sense of belonging are particularly vulnerable to extremist rhetoric;
18. Calls on the Member States to place more stress in their education systems on instruction in media use so that children and young people can learn how to understand and properly evaluate information which they often encounter in unfiltered form on the internet;
19. Underlines the need for both students and educators to have a greater understanding of radicalisation and extremism as well as spreading awareness about the use of social media for radicalisation and promoting extremist ideologies; encourages the Member States to implement internet safety in schools' ICT curriculums in order to prevent online radicalisation;
20. Stresses that social and internet networks are just one part of the radicalisation process and that combating the digital purveyors of radicalisation is only one part of the fight against radicalisation;
21. Reminds the media of the educational aim of the Creative Europe programme, which enables projects aimed at constructing a critical dialogue with the media – especially digital media – to obtain financing in the context of the fight against radicalisation;
22. Recalls the importance of EU programmes and funding instruments such as the Horizon 2020 programme, the Erasmus+ programme, Creative Europe, Europe for Citizens and the Education and Training 2020 strategic framework in the field of education, culture and sport, as crucial vectors for supporting Member States' efforts to tackle inequalities, intolerance, discrimination and prevent marginalisation and to integrate minorities into the social life of individual Member States; calls on the Commission to implement its commitment to mobilise existing targeted funding to promote concrete actions to challenge extremist ideologies and radicalisation through dialogue with the most targeted audiences; welcomes the Commission's announcement that it will, by the end of the year, present recommendations to strengthen the idea of inclusion, diversity and civic values in schools on the basis of the Erasmus+ programme;
23. Notes the role of non-formal and informal learning and the importance of facilitating the involvement of young people in voluntary activities within integrative youth organisations and grassroots sport, in order to strengthen interaction and to help young people acquire social and communicative competences, critical thinking and problem solving skills as well as positive self-perception that complement formal education;

24. Highlights the crucial importance of support services in educational establishments provided by decently trained psychologists and social workers; calls on the Commission to promote exchange of best practices in the education of recent immigrants and refugees to prevent their social exclusion; emphasises the importance of mutual training and common activities of religious leaders in order to positively influence public discourse;
25. Calls on the Commission to find new, creative ways of preventing and combating radicalisation, including schemes for parents whose children could be vulnerable to extremist recruitment;
26. Encourages Member States to implement teaching and learning strategies which explore controversial issues in a way that promotes critical analysis, social values and a shared culture of openness and pluralism in schools and with community;
27. Highlights the role and importance of NGOs and civil society organisations in processes to prevent radicalisation and de-radicalisation;
28. Calls on the Commission to further strengthen the Radicalisation Awareness Network (RAN), inter alia by enhancing access to information and concrete cooperation between stakeholders on anti-radicalisation and to support the EU and its Member States in setting up de-radicalisation and disengagement programmes and in developing 'exit strategies' to help individuals leave violent extremism;
29. Stresses the importance of targeted educational projects in prisons, which are more exposed to the risk of radicalisation;
30. Stresses the importance of developing comprehensive policies based on a cross-sectoral approach between different areas such as culture, sports, employment and welfare policies, and other channels of work on social inclusion and on safeguarding diversity, plurality and common fundamental values at European, national, regional and local levels;
31. Notes that a campaign against radicalism through cultural and human development should emerge as a new public narrative and long-term objective for a smarter effort at strategic counter-terrorism;
32. Recalls the importance of education for democracy, active citizenship and democratic political culture and the importance of values that are at the heart of the European Union – freedom, tolerance, equality and the rule of law;
33. Notes that a highly inclusive education, one of the strategic objectives of the Education and Training 2020 framework, can counterbalance the disadvantages that many children and young people face at home and in this way can help to prevent the radicalisation;
34. Reiterates the importance of promoting equality, social cohesion and active citizenship through education and training and the importance of providing children and young people with a chance to develop skills and competencies needed for active citizenship, intercultural and interreligious dialogue;
35. Stresses that participation in the Erasmus+ programme increases the level of active citizenship among youth; recalls that former Erasmus students show a greater sense of

European identity, an increased sense of belonging and a positive perception of the EU, all of which can lessen the possibility of radicalisation and tackle problems of intolerance and discrimination;

36. Stresses the need to find a balance between freedom of expression and the objectives of security and the prevention of radicalisation.
