(1) The Union is founded on the respect for human dignity, freedom, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights as enshrined in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. Those core values that have inspired the Union’s own creation, as well as the universality and indivisibility of human rights, and respect for the principles of the United Nations Charter and international law, should guide the Union’s action on the international scene. Such action includes fostering the sustainable economic, social and environmental development of developing countries.

(2) A high level of protection and improvement of the quality of the environment and promoting European core values are among the priorities of the Union, as set out in the Commission’s Communication on A European Green Deal74. (4) The behaviour of companies across all sectors of the economy is key to success in the Union’s sustainability objectives as Union companies, especially large ones, rely on global value chains. It is also in the interest of companies to protect human rights and the environment, in particular given the rising concern of consumers and investors regarding these topics. Several initiatives fostering enterprises which support value-oriented transformation already exist on Union, as well as national level.

Amendment

(4) The behaviour of companies across all sectors of the economy is key to success in the Union’s sustainability objectives as many Union companies rely on global value chains. It is also in the interest of companies to protect human rights and the environment, in particular given the rising concern of consumers and investors regarding these topics. Several initiatives fostering enterprises which support value-oriented transformation already exist on Union, as well as national level, including binding legislation in several Member States such as France and Germany, which gives rise to the need for a level playing field for companies in order to avoid fragmentation and to provide legal certainty for businesses operating in the single market. It is moreover essential to establish a European framework for a responsible and sustainable approach to global value chains, given the importance of companies as a pillar in the construction of a sustainable society and economy.

Proposal for a directive
Recital 5

Text proposed by the Commission

(5) Existing international standards on responsible business conduct specify that companies should protect human rights and set out how they should address the protection of the environment across their operations and value chains. The United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights\(^\text{79}\) recognise the responsibility of companies to exercise human rights due diligence by identifying, preventing and mitigating the adverse impacts of their operations on human rights and by accounting for how they address those impacts. Those Guiding Principles state that businesses should avoid infringing human rights and should address adverse human rights impacts that they have caused, contributed to or are linked with in their own operations, subsidiaries and through their direct and indirect business relationships.

Amendment

(5) Well-established existing international standards on responsible business conduct such as the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights\(^\text{79}\) and the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises\(^\text{79a}\) clarified in the OECD Due Diligence Guidance for Responsible Business Conduct\(^\text{79b}\) specify that companies should protect human rights and set out how they should respect and address the protection of the environment across their operations and value chains. The United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights recognise the responsibility of companies to exercise human rights due diligence by identifying, preventing and mitigating the adverse impacts of their operations on human rights and by accounting for how they address those impacts. Amendment

(6) The concept of human rights due diligence was specified and further developed in the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises which extended the application of due diligence to environmental and governance topics. The OECD Guidance on Responsible Business Conduct and sectoral guidance are internationally recognised frameworks setting out practical due diligence steps to help companies identify, prevent, mitigate and account for how they address actual and potential impacts in their operations, value chains and other business relationships. The concept of due diligence is also embedded in the recommendations of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy.

(6a) All companies should respect human rights, as enshrined in the international conventions and instruments listed in the Annex, Part I, Section 2, and those under the scope of this Directive should be required to conduct due diligence and should take appropriate measures to identify and address adverse human rights impacts along their value chain. The extent and nature of due diligence can vary according to the size, sector, operating context, and risk profile of the company.

(7) The United Nations’ Sustainable Development Goals, adopted by all

(7) The United Nations’ Sustainable Development Goals, adopted by all
United Nations Member States in 2015, include the objectives to promote sustained, inclusive and sustainable economic growth. The Union has set itself the objective to deliver on the UN Sustainable Development Goals. The private sector contributes to those aims.

In the current geopolitical situation arising from Russian aggression in Ukraine, the energy crisis, the continuing fallout from COVID-19 and attempts to maintain and strengthen the security of the agri-food chain, the private sector could help promote sustained, inclusive and sustainable economic growth, while avoiding the creation of imbalances on the internal market.

(8) International agreements under the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change, to which the Union and the Member States are parties, such as the Paris Agreement\(^{84}\) and the recent Glasgow Climate Pact\(^{85}\), set out precise avenues to address climate change and keep global warming within 1.5 °C degrees. Besides specific actions being expected from all signatory Parties, the role of the private sector, in particular its investment strategies is also considered central to achieve these objectives. While just 100 companies have been the source of more than 70% of the world’s greenhouse gas emissions since 1988, there is a fundamental mismatch between corporate climate commitments and their actual investments to fight against climate change. This Directive is therefore an important legislative tool to avoid any misleading climate neutrality claims and to stop greenwashing and fossil fuels expansion worldwide in order to achieve international and European climate objectives, also recommended by the latest scientific reports\textsuperscript{85a}.

(9) In the European Climate Law\textsuperscript{86}, the Union also legally committed to becoming climate-neutral by 2050 and to reducing emissions by at least 55\% by 2030. Both these commitments require changing the way in which companies produce and procure. The Commission’s 2030 Climate Target Plan\textsuperscript{87} models various degrees of emission reductions required from different economic sectors, though all need to see considerable reductions under all scenarios for the Union to meet its climate objectives. The Plan also underlines that “changes in corporate governance rules and practices, including on sustainable finance, will make company owners and managers prioritise sustainability objectives in their actions and strategies.” The 2019 Communication on the European Green Deal sets out that all Union actions and policies should pull together to help the Union achieve a successful and just transition towards a sustainable future. It also sets out that sustainability should be further embedded into the corporate governance framework.

(11) The Action Plan on a Circular Economy, the Biodiversity strategy, the Farm to Fork strategy and the Chemicals strategy, the Pharmaceutical Strategy, the 2021 EU Action Plan Towards Zero Pollution for Air, Water and Soil and Updating the 2020 New Industrial Strategy: Building a stronger Single Market for Europe’s recovery, Industry 5.0 and the European Pillar of Social Rights Action Plan and the 2021 Trade Policy Review list an initiative on sustainable corporate governance among their elements. Due diligence requirements under this Directive should therefore contribute to preserving and restoring biodiversity and by improving the state of the environment, in particular air, water and soil. They should also contribute towards accelerating the transition to a non-toxic circular economy. Due diligence requirements under this Directive should also contribute to the objectives of the Zero Pollution Action Plan of creating a toxic-free environment and protecting the health and well-being of people, animals and ecosystems from environment-related risks and negative impacts.

Amendment

(17) Adverse human rights, and environmental impacts occur in companies’ own operations, subsidiaries, products, services, and in their value chains, in particular at the level of raw manufacturing, or at the level of product or waste disposal. In order for the due diligence to have a meaningful impact, it should cover human rights and environmental adverse impacts generated throughout the life-cycle of production and use and disposal of product or provision of services, at the level of own operations, subsidiaries and in value chains.

Amendment 18
Proposal for a directive
Recital 17 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(17a) Global value chains in particular critical raw materials value chains, are impacted by detrimental effects of natural or man-made hazards. The risks in critical value chains have been made apparent by the COVID-19 crisis while the frequency and impact of those shocks are likely to increase in the future, constituting a driver for inflation and leading to a subsequent increase of macroeconomic volatility as well as market and trade uncertainty. To address this, the EU should initiate an annual Union-wide assessment of the resilience of companies to adverse scenarios related to their value chains, that would map, assess and provide potential responses to their value chain risks, including externalities as well as social, environmental and political risks.

Amendment 19
Proposal for a directive
Recital 18
The value chain should cover activities related to the production of a good or provision of services by a company, including the development of the product or the service and the use and disposal of the product as well as the related activities of established business relationships of the company. It should encompass upstream established direct and indirect business relationships that design, extract, manufacture, transport, store and supply raw material, products, parts of products, or provide services to the company that are necessary to carry out the company’s activities, and also downstream relationships, including established direct and indirect business relationships, that use or receive products, parts of products or services from the company up to the end of life of the product, including inter alia the distribution of the product to retailers, the transport and storage of the product, dismantling of the product, its recycling, composting or landfilling.

Amendment 20

Proposal for a directive
Recital 18 a (new)

The value chain should cover activities related to the production, distribution and sale of a good or provision of services by a company, including the development of the product or the service and waste management of the product as well as the related activities of business relationships of the company. It should encompass the activities of a company’s business relationships related to the design, extraction, manufacture, transport, storage and supply of raw material, products, parts of products, as well as the sale or distribution of goods or the provision or development of services, including waste management, transport and storage, excluding the waste management of the product by individual consumers.

(18a) In some situations once products are sold or distributed by a business relationship, companies may have diminished ability to monitor impacts in order to take reasonable steps to prevent or mitigate them. In such situations, identifying actual and potential impacts and taking preventive or mitigating actions will be important prior to and at the point of initial sale or distribution, and in follow up or ongoing interactions with those business relationships when such impacts are reasonably foreseeable or when notified of significant impacts through the notification procedure.

Recital 18 b (new)

(18b) When a company sources products containing recycled material, it may be difficult to verify the origins of the secondary raw materials. In such situations the company should take appropriate measures to trace secondary raw materials to the relevant supplier and evaluate whether there is adequate information to demonstrate that the material is recycled.

Amendment 22

Recital 19

(19) As regards regulated financial undertakings providing loan, credit, or other financial services, “value chain” with respect to the provision of such services should be limited to the activities of the clients receiving such services, and the subsidiaries thereof whose activities are linked to the contract in question. Clients that are households and natural persons not acting in a professional or business capacity, as well as small and medium-sized undertakings, should not be considered to be part of the value chain. The activities of the companies or other legal entities that are included in the value chain of that client should not be covered.

Amendment

(19) As regards regulated financial undertakings providing financial services, linked to the conclusion of a contract within a value chain, the provision of such services should include the activities of the clients directly receiving them, and the subsidiaries thereof whose activities are linked to the contract in question. In order to avoid an overlap of due diligence exercises of regulated financial undertaking, activities of companies or other legal entities that are part of the value chain of that client are excluded from the scope of this Directive if due diligence obligations are set elsewhere under EU law. Clients that are households and natural persons not acting in a professional or business capacity, as well as small and medium sized undertakings, should not be considered to be part of the value chain of regulated financial undertakings.

Recital 20

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

(20) In order to allow companies to properly identify the adverse impacts in their value chain and to make it possible for them to exercise appropriate leverage, the due diligence obligations should be limited in this Directive to established business relationships. For the purpose of this Directive, established business relationships should mean such direct and indirect business relationships which are, or which are expected to be lasting, in view of their intensity and duration and which do not represent a negligible or ancillary part of the value chain. The nature of business relationships as “established” should be reassessed periodically, and at least every 12 months. If the direct business relationship of a company is established, then all linked indirect business relationships should also be considered as established regarding that company.

Amendment 25
Proposal for a directive
Recital 21

Text proposed by the Commission

(21) Under this Directive, EU companies with more than 500 employees on average and a worldwide net turnover exceeding EUR 150 million in the financial year preceding the last financial year should be required to comply with due diligence. As regards companies which do not fulfil those criteria, but which had more than 250 employees on average and more than EUR 40 million worldwide net turnover in the financial year preceding the last financial year and which operate in one or more high-impact sectors, due diligence should apply 2 years after the end of the transposition period of this directive, in order to provide for a longer adaptation period. In order to ensure a proportionate burden, companies operating in such high-impact sectors should be required to comply with more targeted due diligence focusing on severe adverse impacts. Temporary agency workers, including those posted under Article 1(3), point (c), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council, should be included in the calculation of the number of employees in the user company. Posted workers under Article 1(3), points (a) and (b), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU, should only be included in the calculation of the number of employees of the sending company.

(21) Under this Directive, EU companies with more than 250 employees on average and a worldwide net turnover exceeding EUR 40 million in the financial year preceding the last financial year or companies which are the ultimate parent company of a group that had 500 employees and a net worldwide turnover of more than 150 million in the last financial year for which annual financial statements have been prepared should be required to comply with due diligence. The calculation of the thresholds should include the number of employees and turnover of a company’s branches, which are places of business other than the head office that are legally dependent on it, and therefore considered as part of the company, in accordance with EU and national legislation. Temporary agency workers and other workers in non-standard forms of employment, including those posted under Article 1(3), point (c), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive (EU) 2018/957 of the European Parliament and of the Council, should be included in the calculation of the number of employees in the user company. Posted workers under Article 1(3), points (a) and (b), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU, should only be included in the calculation of the number of employees of the sending company.

(22) In order to reflect the priority areas of international action aimed at tackling human rights and environmental issues, the selection of high-impact sectors for the purposes of this Directive should be based on existing sectoral OECD due diligence guidance. The following sectors should be regarded as high-impact for the purposes of this Directive: the manufacture of textiles, leather and related products (including footwear), and the wholesale trade of textiles, clothing and footwear; agriculture, forestry, fisheries (including aquaculture), the manufacture of food products, and the wholesale trade of agricultural raw materials, live animals, wood, food, and beverages; the extraction of mineral resources regardless of where they are extracted from (including crude petroleum, natural gas, coal, lignite, metals and metal ores, as well as all other, non-metallic minerals and quarry products), the manufacture of basic metal products, other non-metallic mineral products and fabricated metal products (except machinery and equipment), and the wholesale trade of mineral resources, basic and intermediate mineral products (including metals and metal ores, construction materials, fuels, chemicals and other intermediate products). As regards the financial sector, due to its specificities, in particular as regards the value chain and the services offered, even if it is covered by sector-specific OECD

(22) In order to reflect the priority areas of international action aimed at tackling human rights and environmental issues, the Commission should develop sector-specific guidelines, including for the following sectors, based on existing sectoral OECD due diligence guidance: the manufacture of textiles, wearing apparel, leather and related products (including footwear), and the wholesale trade and retail of textiles, clothing and footwear; agriculture, forestry, fisheries (including aquaculture), the manufacture of food products, marketing and advertising of food and beverages, and the wholesale trade of agricultural raw materials, live animals, animal products, wood, food, and beverages; energy, the extraction, transport and handling of mineral resources regardless of where they are extracted from (including crude petroleum, natural gas, coal, lignite, metals and metal ores, as well as all other, non-metallic minerals and quarry products), the manufacture of basic metal products, other non-metallic mineral products and fabricated metal products (except machinery and equipment), and the wholesale trade of mineral resources, basic and intermediate mineral products (including metals and metal ores, construction materials, fuels, chemicals and other intermediate products), construction and related activities, the provision of financial services, investment...
guidance, it should not form part of the high-impact sectors covered by this Directive. At the same time, in this sector, the broader coverage of actual and potential adverse impacts should be ensured by also including very large companies in the scope that are regulated financial undertakings, even if they do not have a legal form with limited liability.

(23) In order to achieve fully the objectives of this Directive addressing human rights and adverse environmental impacts with respect to companies’ operations, subsidiaries and value chains, third-country companies with significant operations in the EU should also be covered. More specifically, the Directive should apply to third-country companies which generated a net turnover of at least EUR 150 million in the Union in the financial year preceding the last financial year or a net turnover of more than EUR 40 million but less than EUR 150 million in the financial year preceding the last financial year in one or more of the high-impact sectors, as of 2 years after the end of the transposition period of this Directive.

Amendment

(23) In order to achieve fully the objectives of this Directive addressing human rights and environmental adverse impacts with respect to companies’ operations, and those of its subsidiaries and value chains, third-country companies with significant operations in the EU should also be covered. More specifically, the Directive should apply to third-country companies which generated a net turnover of at least EUR 40 million in the Union in the financial year preceding the last financial year or companies which are the ultimate parent company of a group that had 500 employees and a net worldwide turnover of more than 150 million and at least 40 million was generated in the Union in the last financial year for which annual financial statements have been prepared. The calculation of net turnover should include turnover generated by third party companies with whom the company and/or its subsidiaries has entered into a vertical agreement in the Union in return for royalties.

(25) In order to achieve a meaningful contribution to the sustainability transition, due diligence under this Directive should be carried out with respect to adverse human rights impact on protected persons resulting from the violation of one of the rights and prohibitions as enshrined in the international conventions as listed in the Annex to this Directive. In order to ensure a comprehensive coverage of human rights, a violation of a prohibition or right not specifically listed in that Annex which directly impairs a legal interest protected in those conventions should also form part of the adverse human rights impact covered by this Directive, provided that the company concerned could have reasonably established the risk of such impairment and any appropriate measures to be taken in order to comply with the due diligence obligations under this Directive, taking into account all relevant circumstances of their operations, such as the sector and operational context. Due diligence should further encompass adverse environmental impacts resulting from the violation of one of the prohibitions and obligations pursuant to the international environmental conventions listed in the Annex to this Directive.

Amendment

(25) In order to achieve a meaningful contribution to the sustainability transition, due diligence under this Directive should be carried out with respect to adverse human rights impact on protected persons resulting from any action which removes or reduces the ability of an individual or group to enjoy the rights or to be protected by prohibitions enshrined in the international conventions and instruments listed in the Annex to this Directive, and subsequent case law and the work of treaty bodies related to these conventions, which include trade union, workers’ and social rights. In order to ensure a comprehensive coverage of human rights, a negative impact on the enjoyment of a right not specifically listed in that Annex which directly impairs a legal interest protected in those conventions and instruments should also form part of the adverse human rights impact covered by this Directive, provided that the company concerned could have reasonably established the risk of such impairment and any appropriate measures to be taken in order to comply with the due diligence obligations under this Directive, taking into account all relevant circumstances of their operations, such as the sector and operational context. Due diligence should further encompass adverse environmental impacts resulting from the violation of one of the prohibitions and obligations listed in the Annex to this Directive.

Recital 25 a (new)
This Directive should provide for specific measures in case of adverse systemic state-sponsored impacts resulting from actions, policies, regulations or institutionalised practices decided, implemented and enforced by, or carried out with the active support of States’ national or local authorities.

Companies should also be responsible for using their influence to contribute to an adequate standard of living in value chains. This is understood as a living wage for employees and a living income for self-employed workers and smallholders, which they earn from their work and production and must meet their needs and those of their family.

This Directive acknowledges the 'One Health' approach as recognised by the World Health Organization, an integrated and unifying approach that aims to sustainably balance and optimise the health of people, animals and ecosystems. The 'One Health' approach recognises that the health of humans, domestic and wild animals, plants, and the wider environment, including ecosystems, are closely interlinked and interdependent. It is therefore appropriate to lay down that environmental due diligence should encompass avoiding environmental degradation that results in adverse health effects such as epidemics, and to respect the right to a clean, healthy and sustainable environment. In respect to the G7 commitment to acknowledge the rapid rise in antimicrobial resistance (AMR) at the global scale, it is necessary to promote the prudent and responsible use of antibiotics in human and veterinary medicines.

(28) In order to ensure that due diligence forms part of companies’ corporate policies, and in line with the relevant international framework, companies should integrate due diligence into all their corporate policies and have in place a due diligence policy. The due diligence policy should contain a description of the company’s approach, including in the long term, to due diligence, a code of conduct describing the rules and principles to be followed by the company’s employees and subsidiaries; a description of the processes put in place to implement due diligence, including the measures taken to verify compliance with the code of conduct and to extend its application to established business relationships. The code of conduct should apply in all relevant corporate functions and operations, including procurement and purchasing decisions. Companies should also update their due diligence policy annually.

Amendment

(28) In order to ensure that due diligence forms part of companies’ corporate policies, and in line with the relevant international framework, companies should integrate due diligence into their relevant corporate policies and at all levels of operation and have in place a due diligence policy with short-, medium- and long-term measures and targets. The due diligence policy should contain a description of the company’s approach to due diligence, a code of conduct defining the rules, principles and measures to be followed and implemented where relevant throughout the company and its subsidiaries across all corporate operations; a description of the processes put in place and appropriate measures taken to implement due diligence in line with Articles 7 and 8 in the value chain, including the relevant measures taken to incorporate due diligence into its own business model, employment and purchasing practices with entities with which the company has a business relationship and measures taken to monitor and verify due diligence activities, and adequate policies to avoid passing on the costs of the due diligence process to business partners in a weaker position. (28b) In conflict-affected and high-risk areas, companies run an increased risk to be involved in severe human rights’ abuses. In these areas, companies should therefore undertake heightened, conflict-sensitive due diligence, in order to address these heightened risks and to ensure that they do not facilitate, finance, exacerbate or otherwise negatively impact the conflict or contribute to violations of international human rights law or international humanitarian law in conflict-affected or high-risk areas. Heightened due diligence includes complementing the standard due diligence with a thorough conflict analysis, based on meaningful and conflict-sensitive stakeholder engagement and aimed at ensuring an understanding of the root causes, triggers and parties driving the conflict and the impact of the company’s business activities on the conflict. In situations of armed conflict and/or military occupation, companies should respect the obligations and standards identified in International Humanitarian Law (IHL) and International Criminal Law (ICL) standards. Companies should follow guidance provided by relevant international bodies, including the International Committee of the Red Cross and the UNDP.

Amendment 38
Proposal for a directive
Recital 28 c (new)
(28c) The way a company can be involved in an adverse impact varies. A company can cause an adverse impact where its activities on their own are sufficient to result in an adverse impact. A company can contribute to an adverse impact where its own activities, in combination with the activities of other entities, cause an impact, or that the activities of the company cause, facilitate or incentivise another entity to cause an adverse impact. The contribution must be substantial, meaning that it does not include minor or trivial contributions. Assessing the substantial nature of the contribution and understanding when the actions of the company may have caused, facilitated or incentivised another entity to cause an adverse impact can involve the consideration of multiple factors. Several factors can be taken into account, including the extent to which a company may encourage or motivate an adverse impact by another entity, i.e. the degree to which the activity increased the risk of the impact occurring, the extent to which a company could or should have known about the adverse impact or potential for adverse impact, i.e. the degree of foreseeability, and the degree to which any of the company's activities actually mitigated the adverse impact or decreased the risk of the impact occurring. The mere existence of a business relationship or activities which create the general conditions in which it is possible for adverse impacts to occur should not in itself constitute a relationship of contribution. The activity in question should substantially increase the risk of adverse impact. Lastly, a company can be directly linked to an impact, where there is a relationship between the adverse impact and the company’s products, services or operations through another business relationship and where the company has neither caused nor contributed to the impact. Directly linked is not defined by a direct business relationship. Also, a direct linkage should not imply that the responsibility shifts from the business relationship causing an adverse impact to the company with which it has a linkage.

Proposal for a directive
Recital 29

Text proposed by the Commission

(29) To comply with due diligence obligations, companies need to take appropriate measures with respect to identification, prevention and bringing to an end adverse impacts. An ‘appropriate measure’ should mean a measure that is capable of achieving the objectives of due diligence, commensurate with the degree of severity and the likelihood of the adverse impact, and reasonably available to the company, taking into account the circumstances of the specific case, including characteristics of the economic sector and of the specific business relationship and the company’s influence thereof, and the need to ensure prioritisation of action. In this context, in line with international frameworks, the company’s influence over a business relationship should include, on the one hand its ability to persuade the business relationship to take action to bring to an end or prevent adverse impacts (for example through ownership or factual control, market power, pre-qualification requirements, linking business incentives to human rights and environmental performance, etc.) and, on the other hand, the degree of influence or leverage that the company could reasonably exercise, for example through cooperation with the business partner in question or

Amendment

(29) To comply with due diligence obligations, companies need to take appropriate measures with respect to identification, prevention and bringing to an end adverse impacts that they caused, contributed or are directly linked to. ‘Appropriate measures’ should mean measures that are capable of achieving the objectives of due diligence and effectively addressing the adverse impact identified pursuant to Article 6 in a manner proportionate and commensurate to the degree of severity and the likelihood of the adverse impact and proportionate and commensurate to the size, resources and capacities of the company, taking into account the circumstances of the specific case, including the nature of the adverse impact, characteristics of the economic sector, the nature of the company’s specific activities, products, services, the specific business relationship. For the purposes of Articles 7 and 8, in cases where a company has caused or may have caused an impact, appropriate measures should be understood as measures which aim to prevent or mitigate an impact, and remediate any damage caused by an impact. For the purposes of Articles 7 and 8, in cases where a company has contributed to or may have contributed to an impact, appropriate measures should be understood as measures which aim to prevent or mitigate the contribution to the impact, using or increasing the company’s leverage with other responsible parties to prevent or mitigate the impact, and contributing to remediating any damage caused by an impact, to the extent of the contribution. For the purposes of Articles 7 and 8, in cases where a company’s operations, products or services are or may be directly linked to an impact through its relationships with other entities, appropriate measures should be understood as measures which aim at using or increasing the company’s leverage with responsible parties to seek to prevent or mitigate the impact, and considering using its leverage with responsible parties to enable the remediation of any damage caused by an impact.

(30) Under the due diligence obligations set out by this Directive, a company should identify actual or potential adverse human rights and environmental impacts. In order to allow for a comprehensive identification of adverse impacts, such identification should be based on quantitative and qualitative information. For instance, as regards adverse environmental impacts, the company should obtain information about baseline conditions at higher risk sites or facilities in value chains. Amendment

(30) Under the due diligence obligations set out by this Directive, a company should identify and assess actual or potential adverse human rights and environmental impacts. In order to allow for a comprehensive identification and assessment of adverse impacts, such identification and assessment should be based on meaningful stakeholder engagement and quantitative and qualitative information. For instance, as regards adverse environmental impacts, the company should obtain information about baseline conditions at higher risk sites or facilities in value chains. Identification and assessment of adverse impacts should include assessing the human rights and environmental context in a dynamic way and continuously, including prior to a new environment; and periodically, at least every 12 months, throughout the life of an activity or relationship. Regulated financial undertakings providing loan, credit, or other financial services should identify the adverse impacts only at the inception of the contract. When identifying adverse impacts, companies should also identify and assess the impact of a business relationship’s business model and strategies, including trading, procurement and pricing practices. Where the company cannot prevent, bring to an end or minimize all its adverse impacts at the same time, it should be able to prioritize its action, provided it takes the measures reasonably available to the company, taking into account the specific circumstances.

(30a) Where the company cannot prevent, bring to an end or mitigate all the identified and assessed adverse impacts simultaneously, it should be allowed to prioritise the order in which it takes appropriate measures based on the severity and likelihood of the adverse impact and taking into account risk factors, by developing, implementing and regularly reviewing a prioritisation strategy. In line with the relevant international framework, the severity of an adverse impact should be assessed based on the scale, scope and irremediable character of the adverse impact, taking into account the gravity of an adverse impact, including the number of individuals that are or will be affected, the extent to which the environment is or may be damaged or otherwise affected, its irreversibility and the limits on the ability to restore affected individuals or the environment to a situation equivalent to their situation prior to the impact. Once the most severe and adverse impacts are addressed, the company should address less severe and less likely adverse impacts.

Recital 30 b (new)

Text proposed by the Commission
(30b) Companies should prioritise impacts on the basis of severity and likelihood. The degree of leverage a company has over a business relationship is not relevant to its prioritisation decisions or processes. Recital 32
(32) In line with international standards, prevention and mitigation as well as bringing to an end and minimisation of adverse impacts should take into account the interests of those adversely impacted. In order to enable continuous engagement with the value chain business partner instead of termination of business relations (disengagement) and possibly exacerbating adverse impacts, this Directive should ensure that disengagement is a last-resort action, in line with the Union’s policy of zero-tolerance on child labour. Terminating a business relationship in which child labour was found could expose the child to even more severe adverse human rights impacts. This should therefore be taken into account when deciding on the appropriate action to take.

(32) In line with international standards, prevention and mitigation as well as bringing to an end and minimisation of adverse impacts should take into account the interests of those adversely impacted. In order to enable continuous engagement with the value chain business partner instead of termination of business relations (disengagement) and possibly exacerbating adverse impacts, this Directive should ensure that disengagement is a last-resort action, in line with the Union’s policy of zero-tolerance on child labour, the Union’s strategy on rights of the Child and the target date of 2025 proclaimed by the United Nations for the full elimination of child labour worldwide. Terminating a business relationship in which child labour was found could expose the child to even more severe adverse human rights impacts. In the same line, women in precarious labour conditions could face more severe adverse human rights impacts thus increasing their vulnerability. This should therefore be taken into account when deciding on the appropriate action to take, and disengagement should be avoided where the impact of disengagement would be greater than the adverse impact the company is seeking to prevent or mitigate. In situations of state-imposed forced labour, where the adverse impact is organised by political authorities, unhindered engagement with those adversely impacted and mitigation are not possible. This Directive should ensure that companies terminate a business relationship where state-imposed forced labour is occurring. Moreover, responsible disengagement should also take into account the possible negative impacts on companies depending on the product or affected by disruptions of supply chains.
Amendment 45

Proposal for a directive
Recital 34

Text proposed by the Commission

(34) So as to comply with the prevention and mitigation obligation under this Directive, companies should be required to take the following actions, where relevant. Where necessary due to the complexity of prevention measures, companies should develop and implement a prevention action plan. Companies should seek to obtain contractual assurances from a direct partner with whom they have an established business relationship that it will ensure compliance with the code of conduct or the prevention action plan, including by seeking corresponding contractual assurances from its partners to the extent that their activities are part of the companies’ value chain. The contractual assurances should be accompanied by appropriate measures to verify compliance. To ensure comprehensive prevention of actual and potential adverse impacts, companies should also make investments which aim to prevent adverse impacts, provide targeted and proportionate support for an SME with which they have an established business relationship such as financing, for example, through direct financing, low-interest loans, guarantees of continued sourcing, and assistance in securing financing, to help implement the code of conduct or prevention action plan, or technical guidance such as in the form of training, management systems upgrading, and collaborate with other companies.

Amendment 46

Proposal for a directive
Recital 34 a (new)

(34) So as to comply with the prevention and mitigation obligation under this Directive, companies should be required to take the following appropriate measures, where relevant. Where necessary due to the complexity of prevention measures, companies should develop and implement a prevention action plan. Companies should consider establishing through contractual provisions with a partner with whom they have a business relationship that it will ensure compliance with the code of conduct and, as necessary, a prevention action plan. Partners with whom the company has a business relationship could be asked to seek corresponding contractual provisions from its partners to the extent that their activities are part of the companies’ value chain.
(34a) The contractual provisions should not be such as to result in the transfer of responsibility for carrying out due diligence in accordance with this Directive and the liability for failing to do so. Moreover, the contractual provisions should be fair, reasonable and non-discriminatory under the circumstances, and should reflect the joint tasks of parties to conduct due diligence in ongoing cooperation. Companies should also assess whether the business partner can reasonably be expected to comply with those provisions. Often contractual terms are unilaterally imposed on a supplier by a buyer, and any breach thereof is likely to result in unilateral action by the buyer, such as termination or disengagement. Such unilateral action is not appropriate in the context of due diligence and would probably itself result in adverse impacts. In cases where the breach of such contractual provisions gives rise to a potential adverse impact, the company should first take appropriate measures to prevent or adequately mitigate such impacts, rather than considering ending or suspending the contract, in accordance with applicable law. To ensure comprehensive prevention of actual and potential adverse impacts, companies should also make investments which aim to prevent adverse impacts, provide targeted and proportionate financial and administrative support for an SME with which they have a business relationship such as financing, for example, through direct financing, low-interest loans, guarantees of continued sourcing, and assistance in securing financing, to help implement the code of conduct or prevention action plan, or technical guidance such as in the form of training, management systems upgrading, and collaborate with other companies.
Amendment 47
Proposal for a directive
Recital 35

Text proposed by the Commission

(35) In order to reflect the full range of options for the company in cases where potential impacts could not be addressed by the described prevention or minimisation measures, this Directive should also refer to the possibility for the company to seek to conclude a contract with the indirect business partner, with a view to achieving compliance with the company’s code of conduct or a prevention action plan, and conduct appropriate measures to verify compliance of the indirect business relationship with the contract.

(36) In order to ensure that prevention and mitigation of potential adverse impacts is effective, companies should prioritize engagement with business relationships in the value chain, instead of terminating the business relationship, as a last resort action after attempting at preventing and mitigating adverse potential impacts without success. (36) In order to ensure that prevention and mitigation of potential adverse impacts is effective, companies should prioritize engagement with business relationships in the value chain, instead of terminating the business relationship, as a last resort action after attempting at preventing and mitigating adverse potential impacts without success. In order to allow companies to fulfil that obligation, Member States should provide for the availability of an option to terminate the business relationship in contracts governed by their laws. It is possible that prevention of adverse impacts at the level of indirect business relationships requires collaboration with another company, for example a company which has a direct contractual relationship with the supplier. In some instances, such collaboration could be the only realistic way of preventing adverse impacts, in particular, where the indirect business relationship is not ready to enter into a contract with the company. In these instances, the company should collaborate with the entity which can most effectively prevent or mitigate adverse impacts at the level of the indirect business relationship while respecting competition law.

In order to allow companies to fulfil that obligation, Member States should provide for the availability of an option to terminate or suspend the business relationship in contracts governed by their laws. In deciding to terminate or suspend a business relationship, the company should assess whether the adverse impacts of that decision would be greater than the adverse impact which is intended to be prevented or mitigated. Where companies do temporarily suspend commercial relations or terminate the business relationship, they should take steps to prevent, mitigate, or bring to an end the impacts of suspension or termination, provide reasonable notice to the business partner and keep that decision under review. Proposal for a directive

Text proposed by the Commission

(37) As regards direct and indirect business relationships, industry cooperation, industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives can help create additional leverage to identify, mitigate, and prevent adverse impacts. Therefore it should be possible for companies to rely on such initiatives to support the implementation of their due diligence obligations laid down in this Directive to the extent that such schemes and initiatives are appropriate to support the fulfilment of those obligations. Companies could assess, at their own initiative, the alignment of these schemes and initiatives with the obligations under this Directive. In order to ensure full information on such initiatives, the Directive should also refer to the possibility for the Commission and the Member States to facilitate the dissemination of information on such schemes or initiatives and their outcomes. The Commission, in collaboration with Member States, may issue guidance for assessing the fitness of industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives.

Amendment

(37) Industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives can help create additional leverage to identify, mitigate, and prevent adverse impacts. Therefore it should be possible for companies to participate in such initiatives to support aspects of their due diligence, including to coordinate joint leverage, achieve efficiencies, scale up best practices, and seek expertise relevant to specific sectors, geographies, commodities or risk issues. The meaning of initiatives is broad and includes initiatives that support, monitor, evaluate, certify and/or verify aspects of a company’s due diligence, or the due diligence conducted by its subsidiaries and/or business relationships. Such initiatives may be developed and overseen by governments, industry associations, groupings of interested organisations, social partners or civil society organisations, and include monitoring organisations, global framework agreements, sector dialogues and initiatives that certify aspects of due diligence. In order to ensure full information on such initiatives, the Directive should also refer to the possibility for the Commission and the Member States to facilitate the dissemination of information on such schemes or initiatives and their outcomes. The Commission, in collaboration with Member States, the OECD and relevant stakeholders, should issue guidance for assessing the precise scope, alignment with this Directive, and credibility of industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives. Companies participating in industry or multi-stakeholder initiatives or using third party verification for aspects of their due diligence should still be able to be sanctioned or found liable for violations of this Directive and damage suffered by victims as a result. The minimum standards for third-party verifiers to be adopted via delegated acts under this Directive should be developed in close consultation with all relevant stakeholders and reviewed in light of their appropriateness in accordance with the objectives of this Directive. Third-party verifiers should be subject to oversight by the relevant authorities and, where necessary, be subject to sanctions, in accordance with national and EU legislation.

(38) Under the due diligence obligations set out by this Directive, if a company identifies actual human rights or environmental adverse impacts, it should take appropriate measures to bring those to an end. It can be expected that a company is able to bring to an end actual adverse impacts in their own operations and in subsidiaries. However, it should be clarified that, as regards established business relationships, where adverse impacts cannot be brought to an end, companies should minimise the extent of such impacts. Minimisation of the extent of adverse impacts should require an outcome that is the closest possible to bringing the adverse impact to an end. To provide companies with legal clarity and certainty, this Directive should define which actions companies should be required to take for bringing actual human rights and environmental adverse impacts to an end and minimisation of their extent, where relevant depending on the circumstances.

It can be expected that a company is able to bring to an end actual adverse impacts in their own operations and in subsidiaries. of parties to conduct due diligence in ongoing cooperation, with an emphasis on taking appropriate measures to bring adverse impacts to an end. Companies should also assess whether the business partner can reasonably be expected to comply with those provisions. Often contractual terms are unilaterally imposed on a supplier by a buyer, and any breach thereof is likely to result in unilateral action by the buyer such as termination or disengagement. Such unilateral action is not appropriate in the context of due diligence and would probably itself result in adverse impacts. In cases where the breach of such contractual provisions gives rise to a potential adverse impact, the company should first take appropriate measures to prevent or adequately mitigate such impacts, rather than consider ending or suspending the contract, in accordance with applicable law. Finally, companies should also make investments aiming at ceasing or mitigating the extent of an adverse impact, provide targeted and proportionate support for an SMEs with which they have a business relationship and collaborate with other entities, including, where relevant, to increase the company’s ability to bring the adverse impact to an end.

However, this Directive should also, for cases where actual adverse impacts could not be brought to an end or adequately mitigated by the described measures, refer to the obligation for companies to refrain from entering into new or extending existing relations with the partner in question and, where the law governing their relations so entitles them to, to either temporarily suspend commercial relationships with the partner in question, while pursuing efforts to bring to an end or minimise the extent of the adverse impact, or terminate the business relationship with respect to the activities concerned, if the adverse impact is considered severe. However, this Directive should also, for cases where actual adverse impacts that a company caused or contributed to could not be brought to an end or adequately mitigated by the described measure, and there is no reasonable prospect of change, refer to the obligation for companies to refrain from entering into new or extending existing relations with the partner in question and, where the law governing their relations so entitles them to, as a last resort, in line with responsible disengagement, to either temporarily suspend commercial relationships with the partner in question, while pursuing efforts to bring to an end or mitigate the adverse impact, or terminate the business relationship with respect to the activities concerned, on account of the severity of the actual adverse impact or if the conditions for temporary suspension are not met. In deciding to terminate or suspend a business relationship, the company should assess whether the adverse impacts of that decision would be greater than the adverse impact which is intended to be brought to an end or mitigated. (41a) Where a company has caused or contributed to an actual adverse impact, the company should take appropriate measures to remediate that impact. Remedial measures should aim to restore the affected persons and groups or communities and/or the environment to a situation equivalent or as close as possible to their situation prior to the impact, and be developed taking into account the needs and views expressed by affected stakeholders. They may include, but are not limited to, compensation, restitution, rehabilitation, public apologies, reinstatement or cooperation in good faith with investigations. In certain situations, financial compensation may be a necessary way to provide such restoration. Where a company is directly linked to an adverse impact, it should be allowed to voluntarily participate in any remedial measures, where appropriate, and consider using its leverage with responsible parties to enable the remediation of any damage caused by an impact. Member States should ensure that stakeholders affected by an adverse impact should not be required to seek remediation prior to filing claims in court.

(42) Companies should provide the possibility for persons and organisations to submit complaints directly to them in case of legitimate concerns regarding actual or potential human rights and environmental adverse impacts. Organisations who could submit such complaints should include trade unions and other workers’ representatives representing individuals working in the value chain concerned and civil society organisations active in the areas related to the value chain concerned where they have knowledge about a potential or actual adverse impact. Companies should establish a procedure for dealing with those complaints and inform workers, trade unions and other workers’ representatives, where relevant, about such processes. Recourse to the complaints and remediation mechanism should not prevent the complainant from having recourse to judicial remedies. In accordance with international standards, complaints should be entitled to request from the company appropriate follow-up on the complaint and to meet with the company’s representatives at an appropriate level to discuss potential or actual severe adverse impacts that are the subject matter of the complaint. This access should not lead to unreasonable solicitations of companies.

Amendment

(42) Companies should provide a publicly available and effective notification and non-judicial grievance mechanisms at operational level, that can be used by persons and organisations to notify them of or raise grievances and request remediation in case of legitimate concerns regarding actual or potential human rights, environmental adverse impacts in the value chain. Persons and organisations who could submit such grievances should include persons who are affected or have reasonable grounds to believe that they might be affected and their legitimate representatives, trade unions and other workers’ representatives representing individuals working in the value chain concerned and credible and experienced organisations the purpose of which includes the protection of the environment. Notifications may be submitted by the aforementioned persons and organisations as well as civil society organisations active in the areas related to the value chain concerned where they have knowledge about a potential or actual adverse impact, and legal and natural persons defending human rights and the environment. Companies should establish a procedure for dealing with those notifications and grievances and inform workers, trade unions and other workers’ representatives, where relevant, about such processes. Companies should provide the possibility of submitting notifications and grievances through collaborative arrangements, including industry initiatives, with other companies or organisations, by participating in multi-stakeholder grievance mechanisms or joining a global framework agreement. The submission of a notification or grievance should not be a prerequisite nor preclude the person submitting them from having access to the substantiated concerns procedure nor to judicial or other non-judicial mechanisms, such as the OECD national contact points where they exist. In accordance with international standards, persons submitting grievances or notifications, where they do not submit them anonymously, should be entitled to receive from the company timely and appropriate follow-up and persons submitting grievances should be additionally entitled to engage with the company’s representatives at an appropriate level to discuss potential or actual adverse impacts that are the subject matter of the complaint, to be provided with the reasoning as to whether a grievance has been considered founded or unfounded and provided with information on the steps and actions taken, and to request remediation or contribution to remediation. This access should not lead to unreasonable solicitations of companies. Companies should also be responsible for ensuring that any persons submitting grievances or notifications are protected from potential retaliation and retribution, including by ensuring anonymity or confidentiality in the notification and grievance process, in accordance with national law. The notification and non-judicial grievance procedure should be legitimate, accessible, predictable, equitable, transparent, rights-compatible, gender- and culturally responsive, based on engagement and dialogue, and adaptable as set out in the effectiveness criteria for non-judicial grievance mechanisms in Principle 31 of the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child General Comment No 16.
Companies should raise awareness among affected stakeholders of the existence, objectives and processes of notifications and grievance mechanisms, in the official language(s) of the state where they are operating, including on how to access them, decisions and remedies relating to a company and how the company is implementing them. Workers and their representatives should also be properly protected, and any non-judicial remediation efforts should be without prejudice to encouraging collective bargaining and recognition of trade unions and should by no means undermine the role of legitimate trade unions or workers’ representatives in addressing labour-related disputes.

(44c) Companies should take appropriate measures to carry out meaningful engagement with affected stakeholders allowing for genuine interaction and dialogue in their due diligence process. Engagement should cover information and consultation of affected stakeholders and should be comprehensive, structural, effective, timely and culturally and gender responsive. There are situations in which it will not be possible to carry out meaningful engagement with affected stakeholders, or where engagement with additional expert perspectives is useful to allow the company to comply fully with the requirements of this Directive, in particular in the context of scoping and prioritisation decisions. In these cases companies should engage in meaningful engagement with other relevant stakeholders, such as civil society organisations or legal or natural persons defending human rights or the environment in order to gain credible insights into potential or actual adverse impacts. Consultation should be ongoing and companies should provide comprehensive, targeted and relevant information to affected stakeholders. Affected stakeholders should have the right to request additional written information, which should be provided by the company within a reasonable amount of time and in an appropriate and comprehensive format. Where such a request is refused, affected stakeholders should have the right to a written justification for such refusal. The information and consultation of affected stakeholders should take due account of barriers to engagement, ensure that stakeholders are free from retaliation and retribution, including by maintaining confidentiality and anonymity, and particular attention should be paid to the needs of vulnerable stakeholders, and to overlapping vulnerabilities and intersecting factors, including by ensuring a gender-responsive approach, and fully respecting the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. Workers representatives should be informed by their company about its due diligence strategy and its implementation, in accordance with existing EU law and without prejudice to their applicable rights to information, consultation and participation, and in particular those covered by relevant EU legislation in the field of employment and social rights, including Directive 2002/14/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council \(^{106a}\), Directive 2009/38/EC of the

Such contractual clauses should stipulate, as a minimum, a clear allocation of tasks between contracting parties in ongoing cooperation, that they can not result in the transfer of responsibility for carrying out due diligence, and that, when such clauses are breached, companies should avoid terminating such clauses by first taking appropriate measures in line with Articles 7 and 8 of this Directive. The guidance should further clarify that the simple inclusion of contractual assurances cannot, on its own, satisfy the due diligence standards of this Directive. Recital 54 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(54a) In order to prevent an artificial reduction of potential administrative fines resulting from an ultimate parent company shifting its net worldwide turnover to third entities, Member States should ensure that, with regards to companies referred to in Articles 2(1)(b) and 2(2)(b), administrative pecuniary sanctions are calculated taking into account the consolidated turnover reported by that company.

Amendment 73
Proposal for a directive
Recital 54 b (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(54b) Under Article 18(2) of Directive 2014/24/EU, Article 36(2) of Directive 2014/25/EU and Article 30(3) of Directive 2014/23/EU, Member States are required to take appropriate measures to ensure compliance with obligations under Union law with regards to procurement and concession contracts. Therefore the Commission should assess whether it is relevant to review these directives to further specify the requirements and measures Member States are to adopt to ensure compliance with the sustainability and due diligence obligations under this Directive throughout procurement and concession processes, from selection to performance of the contract.

Amendment 74
Proposal for a directive
Recital 56

Text proposed by the Commission

(56) In order to ensure effective compensation of victims of adverse impacts, Member States should be required to lay down rules governing the civil liability of companies for damages arising due to its failure to comply with the due diligence process. The company should be liable for damages if they failed to comply with the obligations to prevent and mitigate potential adverse impacts or to bring actual impacts to an end and minimise their extent, and as a result of this failure an adverse impact that should have been identified, prevented, mitigated, brought to an end or its extent minimised through the appropriate measures occurred and led to damage.

Amendment

(56) In order to ensure effective compensation of victims of adverse impacts, Member States should be required to lay down rules governing the civil liability of companies for damages arising due to its failure to comply with the due diligence process. The company should be liable for damages if they failed to comply with the obligations to prevent and mitigate potential adverse impacts or to bring actual impacts to an end and mitigate them, or provide remediation, and as a result of this failure the company caused or contributed to an adverse impact that should have been identified, prioritised, prevented, mitigated, brought to an end, remediated or its extent minimised through the appropriate measures, and led to damage. Member States should also make sure that, in case there is no legal successor, the mother companies can be held liable for their subsidiary where the subsidiary is under the scope of this Directive or was at the time of the impact and has been dissolved by the parent company or has dissolved itself intentionally in order to avoid liability, irrespective of any cooperation with the parent company in conducting due diligence.
Amendment 75
Proposal for a directive
Recital 57

Text proposed by the Commission

(57) As regards damages occurring at the level of established indirect business relationships, the liability of the company should be subject to specific conditions. The company should not be liable if it carried out specific due diligence measures. However, it should not be exonerated from liability through implementing such measures in case it was unreasonable to expect that the action actually taken, including as regards verifying compliance, would be adequate to prevent, mitigate, bring to an end or minimise the adverse impact. In addition, in the assessment of the existence and extent of liability, due account should be taken of the company’s efforts, insofar as they relate directly to the damage in question, to take remedial action, including that required of them by a supervisory authority, any investments made and any targeted support provided as well as any collaboration with affected stakeholders and other entities to address adverse impacts in its value chains.

Amendment 76
Proposal for a directive
Recital 57 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(57a) Moreover, the possibility for a company to prioritise, when necessary, should be taken into consideration for its potential liability under Article 22. Provided that the prioritisation was done faithfully with regard to the severity and likelihood of the adverse impact, a company should not be held liable if an adverse impact arises from an activity or operation that was legitimately not prioritised.

Amendment 77

Proposal for a directive
Recital 58

Text proposed by the Commission

(58) The liability regime does not regulate who should prove that the company’s action was reasonably adequate under the circumstances of the case, therefore this question is left to national law.

Amendment

(58) The liability regime does not regulate who should prove that the company’s action was reasonably adequate under the circumstances of the case, however Member States may foresee in their national law that where a claimant provides prima facie elements substantiating the likelihood of the defendant’s liability, the defendant is held liable, unless it can prove that it has complied with its obligations under this Directive.

Amendment 78

Proposal for a directive
Recital 59

Text proposed by the Commission

(59) As regards civil liability rules, the civil liability of a company for damages arising due to its failure to carry out adequate due diligence should be without prejudice to civil liability of its subsidiaries or the respective civil liability of direct and indirect business partners in the value chain. Also, the civil liability rules under this Directive should be without prejudice to Union or national rules on civil liability related to adverse human rights impacts or to adverse environmental impacts that provide for liability in situations not covered by or providing for stricter liability than this Directive.

Amendment

(59) As regards civil liability rules, the civil liability of a company for damages that it has caused or contributed to arising due to its failure to carry out adequate due diligence should be without prejudice to civil liability of its subsidiaries or the respective civil liability of direct and indirect business partners in the value chain. Also, the civil liability rules under this Directive should not limit companies’ liability under Union or national legal systems, including rules on joint and several liability.
Amendment 79
Proposal for a directive
Recital 59 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(59a) The right to an effective remedy is an internationally recognised human right, enshrined in Article 8 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Article 9(3) of the Aarhus Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters and Article 2(3) of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and is also a fundamental right of the Union within the meaning of Article 47 of the Charter. Delays and difficulties in accessing evidence, as well as gender disparity, geographical location, vulnerabilities and marginalisation can constitute major practical and procedural obstacles for the persons concerned, hindering their access to an effective remedy without fear of reprisals. Member States should thus ensure that victims have access to an effective remedy and that the costs and the length of the proceedings do not prevent them from access to courts. These measures may, for example, take the form of public funding, including structural support for victims of actual and potential adverse impacts, limitation of applicable court or administrative fees, or access to legal aid.

Amendment 80
Proposal for a directive
Recital 59 b (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(59b) Mandated trade unions, civil society organisations or other relevant actors acting in the public interest, such as National Human Rights Institutions or an Ombudsman, should be able to bring actions before their courts on behalf of a victim or group of victims of adverse impacts, and should have the rights and obligations of a claimant party in the proceedings, without prejudice to existing national law.

Amendment 81
Proposal for a directive
Recital 59 c (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

(59c) Limitation periods for bringing civil liability claims for damages should be at least ten years. When setting the starting point of such limitation periods, Member States should consider taking into account the moment the impact causing the damage has ceased and when the victim concerned knew or could be reasonable expected to have known that the damage they suffered was caused by the adverse impact.

Amendment 82
Proposal for a directive
Recital 65 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(65a) Human rights and environmental rights defenders are on the front line of the consequences of adverse environmental and human rights impacts worldwide and in the EU, and have been threatened, intimidated, persecuted, harassed or even murdered. Companies should therefore not expose them to any kind of violence.

Amendment

(69) This Directive is without prejudice to obligations in the areas of human rights, protection of the environment and climate change under other Union legislative acts. Amendment

(qc) ‘to contribute to an adverse impact’ means that a company's own activities, in combination with the activities of other entities, cause an impact, or that the activities of the company cause, facilitate or incentivise another entity to cause an adverse impact.
The contribution must be substantial, meaning that it does not include minor or trivial contributions. Assessing the substantial nature of the contribution and understanding when the actions of the company may have caused, facilitated or incentivised another entity to cause an adverse impact can involve the consideration of multiple factors. The following factors can be taken into account:

– the extent to which a company may encourage or motivate an adverse impact by another entity, i.e. the degree to which the activity increased the risk of the impact occurring.

– the extent to which a company could or should have known about the adverse impact or potential for adverse impact, i.e. the degree of foreseeability.

– the degree to which any of the company's activities actually mitigated the adverse impact or decreased the risk of the impact occurring.

The mere existence of a business relationship or activities which create the general conditions in which it is possible for adverse impacts to occur does not in itself constitute a relationship of contribution. The activity in question should substantially increase the risk of adverse impact;

Amendment 127

OPINION OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

for the Committee on Legal Affairs

Rapporteur for opinion(*): Raphaël Glucksmann

(*) Associated committee – Rule 57 of the Rules of Procedure
SHORT JUSTIFICATION

The DROI rapporteur welcomes the Commission’s proposal and considers it likely to contribute to fostering positive behavioural change by companies towards identification, prevention and mitigation of harmful impacts of their operations and relationships in their global value chains.

With this legislative proposal, the EU has an opportunity to assert itself as a global normative power by showing leadership in addressing the serious sustainable development challenge faced by societies collectively and globally. This Directive presents an unparalleled occasion for the EU to integrate human and environmental sustainability into business and corporate practices and to drive change on the global level.

However, in many respects the proposal fails to adopt a human-rights centred approach and to implement the widely accepted international standards. It does not fully meet its stated objectives and falls short in living up to due diligence best practices, already implemented by many EU companies on a voluntary basis.

In order to scale up the quality and efficiency of due diligence processes and to enhance accountability of companies along their value chains, the rapporteur identifies several aspects where clarification and improvements are to be envisaged. These improvements aim at making the legislation more effective and workable for companies, affected stakeholders and victims.

To this end, the following elements could be added or strengthened:

- ensuring that companies carry out due diligence efforts throughout their entire value chains, based on the risk of adverse impacts determined by their sector of activity and the context of their operations;

- requiring companies to tackle risks and adverse impacts on good governance, given the proven and internationally recognised interrelationship between good governance and the enjoyment of Human Rights;

- requiring companies to meaningfully engage with stakeholders with the aim of informing and improving their corporate decisions and due diligence practices, as well as to ensure protection and safety of all stakeholders from retaliation and reprisal for their participation;

- requiring companies to provide for effective remediation of harm caused by or connected to their operations and value chains;

- ensuring liability of companies and guaranteeing access to justice and legal remedies for victims of harm linked to violations of due diligence obligations.

AMENDMENTS

The Committee on Foreign Affairs calls on the Committee on Legal Affairs, as the committee responsible, to take into account the following amendments:

Amendment 1

Proposal for a directive

Recital 1

Text proposed by the Commission

(1) The Union is founded on the respect for human dignity, freedom, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights as enshrined in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. Those core values that have inspired the Union’s own creation, as well as the universality and indivisibility of human rights, and respect for the principles of the United Nations Charter and international law, should guide the Union’s action on the international scene. Such action includes fostering the sustainable economic, social and environmental development of developing countries.

Amendment

(1) The Union is founded on the respect for human dignity, freedom, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights as enshrined in the EU Treaties and the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. Such action includes fostering the sustainable economic, social and environmental development of developing countries.

Amendment

(5) Existing international standards on responsible business conduct specify that companies have a responsibility to respect and should protect human rights and set out how they should address the protection of the environment across their operations and value chains. The United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights\(^79\) recognise the responsibility of human rights due diligence by identifying, preventing and mitigating the adverse impacts of their operations on human rights and by accounting for how they address those impacts. Those Guiding Principles state that businesses should avoid infringing human rights and should address adverse human rights impacts that they have caused, contributed to or are linked with in their own operations, subsidiaries and through their direct and indirect business relationships.

Those Guiding Principles state that businesses should have in place processes to enable the remediation of any adverse human right impacts they cause or to which they contribute. Those Guiding Principles further recognise, as part of their duty to protect against business-related human rights abuses, that States should take appropriate steps to ensure, through judicial, administrative and legislative means, that those affected have access to an effective remedy.

Amendment

(6) The concept of human rights due diligence was specified and further developed in the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises\(^80\) which extended the application of due diligence to environmental and governance topics. The OECD Guidance on Responsible Business Conduct and sectoral guidance\(^81\) are internationally recognised frameworks setting out practical due diligence steps to help companies identify, prevent, mitigate and account for how they address actual and potential impacts in their operations, value chains and other business relationships. The concept of due diligence is also embedded in the recommendations of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy.82

Amendment 4

Proposal for a directive
Recital 12
(12) This Directive is in coherence with the EU Action Plan on Human Rights and Democracy 2020-2024\(^99\). This Action Plan defines as a priority to strengthen the Union’s engagement to actively promote the global implementation of the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and other relevant international guidelines such as the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, including by advancing relevant due diligence standards.

The Action Plan also emphasises the importance of the fight against corruption along the lines of the UN Convention against Corruption, recognising that corruption facilitates, perpetuates and institutionalises human rights violations and hinders the observance and implementation of human rights.

Amendment 5

Proposal for a directive
Recital 14

(14) This Directive aims to ensure that companies active in the internal market contribute to sustainable development and the sustainability transition of economies and societies through the identification, prevention and mitigation, bringing to an end and minimisation of potential or actual adverse human rights and environmental impacts connected with companies’ own operations, subsidiaries and through bringing to an end, providing

Amendment 6

Proposal for a directive
Recital 15

Text proposed by the Commission

(15) Companies should take appropriate steps to set up and carry out due diligence measures, with respect to their own operations, their subsidiaries, as well as their established direct and indirect business relationships throughout their value chains in accordance with the provisions of this Directive. This Directive should not require companies to guarantee, in all circumstances, that adverse impacts will never occur or that they will be stopped. For example with respect to business relationships where the adverse impact results from State intervention, the company might not be in a position to arrive at such results. Therefore, the main obligations in this Directive should be ‘obligations of means’. The company should take the appropriate measures which can reasonably be expected to result in prevention or minimisation of the adverse impact under the circumstances of the specific case. Account should be taken of the specificities of the company’s value chain, sector or geographical area in which its value chain partners operate, the company’s power to influence its direct and indirect business relationships, and whether the company could increase its power of influence.

This Directive should not require companies to guarantee, in all circumstances, that adverse impacts will never occur or that they will be stopped. For example with respect to business relationships where the adverse impact results from State intervention, the company might not be in a position to arrive at such results. In such a situation, the company should foresee following its assessment to terminate the business relationship with respect of the activities concerned. Therefore, the main obligations in this Directive should be ‘obligations of means’. The company should take the appropriate measures which can reasonably be expected to result in prevention or minimisation of the adverse impact under the circumstances of the specific case. Account should be taken of the specificities of the company’s value chain, sector or geographical area in which its value chain partners operate, the company’s power to influence its direct and indirect business relationships, and whether the company could increase its power of influence.
Amendment 7

Proposal for a directive
Recital 15 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(15a) Companies should adapt the due diligence measures to the context, environment and political and social circumstances of their own operations, their subsidiaries, as well as their business relationships throughout their value chains. In conflict-affected and high-risk areas, companies face an increased risk of being involved in serious human rights abuses. In these areas, Member States and companies should respect their obligations under International Humanitarian Law (IHL) when applicable, and should undertake heightened due diligence following the guidance on heightened human rights due diligence for business in conflict-affected contexts developed by the UNDP and other relevant international bodies. This includes complementing standard due diligence with a conflict analysis, based on stakeholders engagement, aimed at understanding the root causes, triggers and parties driving the conflict and the impact of the company’s business activities on the conflict.

Amendment 8

Proposal for a directive
Recital 16

Text proposed by the Commission

(16) The due diligence process set out in this Directive should cover the six steps defined by the OECD Due Diligence Guidance for Responsible Business Conduct, which include due diligence.
measures for companies to identify and address adverse human rights and environmental impacts. This encompasses the following steps: (1) integrating due diligence into policies and management systems, (2) identifying and assessing adverse human rights and environmental impacts, (3) preventing, ceasing or minimising actual and potential adverse human rights, and environmental impacts, (4) assessing the effectiveness of measures, (5) communicating, (6) providing remediation.

The OECD Due Diligence Guidance for Responsible Business Conduct also includes detailed recommendations to ensure meaningful stakeholder involvement and access to justice, including guidance to remove barriers to engagement with vulnerable stakeholder groups.

Amendment 9
Proposal for a directive
Recital 16 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

(16a) For each of the six steps and throughout the entire due diligence process, companies should carry out meaningful stakeholders engagement. As set out in the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, effective stakeholder engagement involves interactive processes, is characterised by two-way communication and depends on the good faith of the participants on both sides. For the purpose of this Directive, stakeholders engagement processes should guarantee the safety and protection of the physical and legal integrity of stakeholders. Companies should address risks of retaliation and reprisal faced by stakeholders due to their participation. Companies should pay special attention to overlapping vulnerabilities and intersecting factors in stakeholder engagement. Vulnerable stakeholders groups suffer from differentiated and often disproportionate adverse impacts and often face discrimination and additional barriers to participation and access to justice. Companies should provide meaningful information to stakeholders about actual and potential adverse impacts on human rights, the environment and good governance of particular operations, projects and investments, in a timely and accessible manner, taking into account specifics of the stakeholder’s group. Companies must respect the rights of indigenous peoples, as laid out in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, including as regards their free, prior and informed consent and their right to self-determination.

Amendment 10

Recital 17

Text proposed by the Commission

(17) Adverse human rights and environmental impact occur in companies’ own operations, subsidiaries, products, and in their value chains, in particular at the level of raw material sourcing, manufacturing, or at the level of product or waste disposal. In order for the due diligence to have a meaningful impact, it should cover human rights and environmental adverse impacts generated throughout the life-cycle of production and use and disposal of product or provision of services, at the level of own operations, subsidiaries and in value chains.

Amendment

(17) Adverse impacts on human rights, the environment and good governance, occur in companies’ own operations, subsidiaries, products, services, and in their value chains, in particular at the level of raw material sourcing, manufacturing, or at the level of product or waste disposal. In order for the due diligence to have a meaningful impact, it should cover adverse impacts on human rights, the environment and good governance generated throughout the life-cycle of production and use and disposal of product or provision of services, at the level of own operations, subsidiaries and in the value chains of companies within the scope.
Amendment 11
Proposal for a directive
Recital 20

Text proposed by the Commission

(20) In order to allow companies to properly identify the adverse impacts in their value chain and to make it possible for them to exercise appropriate leverage, the due diligence obligations should be limited in this Directive to established business relationships. For the purpose of this Directive, established business relationships should mean such direct and indirect business relationships which are, or which are expected to be lasting, in view of their intensity and duration and which do not represent a negligible or ancillary part of the value chain. The nature of business relationships as “established” should be reassessed periodically, and at least every 12 months. If the direct business relationship of a company is established, then all linked indirect business relationships should also be considered as established regarding that company.

Amendment 12
Proposal for a directive
Recital 21

Text proposed by the Commission

(21) Under this Directive, EU companies with more than 500 employees on average and a worldwide net turnover exceeding EUR 150 million in the financial year preceding should be required to comply with due diligence. Amendment

(21) Under this Directive, EU companies with more than 250 employees on average or a worldwide net turnover exceeding EUR 40 million and/or a balance sheet of more than EUR 20 million in the last financial year for which annual financial statements have been prepared should be required to comply with due diligence. As regards companies more than EUR 40 million worldwide net turnover in the financial year preceding the last financial year and which operate in one or more high-impact sectors, due diligence should apply 2 years after the end of the transposition period of this directive, in order to provide for a longer adaptation period. In order to ensure a proportionate burden, companies operating in such high-impact sectors should be required to comply with more targeted due diligence focusing on severe adverse impacts.

Temporary agency workers, including those posted under Article 1(3), point (c), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council, should be included in the calculation of the number of employees in the user company. Posted workers under Article 1(3), points (a) and (b), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU, should only be included in the calculation of the number of employees of the sending company.

Amendment 13

Proposal for a directive
Recital 22

Text proposed by the Commission

(22) In order to reflect the priority areas of international action aimed at tackling human rights and environmental issues, the selection of high-impact sectors for the purposes of this Directive should be based on existing sectoral OECD due diligence which do not fulfil those criteria, but are publicly listed on the stock exchange or had more than 50 employees on average, and had a net worldwide turnover of more than EUR 8 million and/or a balance sheet of more than EUR 4 million in the last financial year for which annual financial statements have been prepared, provided that at least 50% of its net turnover was generated in one or more high-impact sectors, due diligence should apply 2 years after the end of the transposition period of this directive, in order to provide for a longer adaptation period. Temporary agency workers, including those posted under Article 1(3), point (c), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council, should be included in the calculation of the number of employees in the user company. guidance. The following sectors should be regarded as high-impact for the purposes of this Directive: the manufacture of textiles, leather and related products (including footwear), and the wholesale trade of textiles, clothing and footwear; agriculture, forestry, fisheries (including aquaculture), the manufacture of food products, and the wholesale trade of agricultural raw materials, live animals, wood, food, and beverages; the extraction of mineral resources regardless of where they are extracted from (including crude petroleum, natural gas, coal, lignite, metals and metal ores, as well as all other, non-metallic minerals and quarry products), the manufacture of basic metal products, other non-metallic mineral products and fabricated metal products (except machinery and equipment), and the wholesale trade of mineral resources, basic and intermediate mineral products (including metals and metal ores, construction materials, fuels, chemicals and other intermediate products). As regards the financial sector, due to its specificities, in particular as regards the value chain and the services offered, even if it is covered by sector-specific OECD guidance, it should not form part of the high-impact sectors covered by this Directive. At the same time, in this sector, the broader coverage of actual and potential adverse impacts should be ensured by also including very large companies in the scope that are regulated financial undertakings, even if they do not have a legal form with limited liability.

The following sectors should be regarded as high-impact for the purposes of this Directive: the manufacture of textiles, wearing apparel, leather and related products (including footwear and articles of fur), and the wholesale trade and retail sale of clothing, footwear and leather goods in specialised stores; agriculture, water supply, forestry, fisheries (including aquaculture), botanical and zoological gardens and nature reserves activities, the manufacture of food products, and the wholesale trade of agricultural raw materials, live animals, wood, food, and beverages; mining and quarrying, the extraction and refining, transport and handling of mineral resources regardless of where they are extracted from (including crude petroleum, natural gas, coal, lignite, metals and metal ores, as well as all other, non-metallic minerals and quarry products), the manufacture of basic metal products, other non-metallic mineral products and fabricated metal products, and the wholesale trade of mineral resources, basic and intermediate mineral products (including metals and metal ores, construction materials, fuels, chemicals and other intermediate products); manufacture of computer, electronic and optical products, manufacture of electrical equipment and manufacture of machinery and equipment; construction, including the construction of buildings, civil engineering and specialised construction activities; financial and insurance activities and real estate activities; electricity, gas, steam and air conditioning supply, including production, transmission, distribution and trade of these products; legal and accounting activities, including auditing activities; accommodation and food service activities and cleaning activities; security and investigation activities, including security systems service activities; employment activities; remediation activities and other waste management services, waste collection, treatment and disposal activities; materials recovery; human health and social work activities, including residential care activities; information service activities, including data processing, hosting and related activities; web portals. In the financial sector, the broader coverage of actual and potential adverse impacts should be ensured by also including very large companies in the scope that are regulated financial undertakings, even if they do not have a legal form with limited liability.

(25) In order to achieve a meaningful contribution to the sustainability transition, due diligence under this Directive should be carried out with respect to adverse human rights impact on protected persons resulting from the violation of one of the rights and prohibitions as enshrined in the international conventions as listed in the Annex to this Directive. In order to ensure a comprehensive coverage of human rights, a violation of a prohibition or right not specifically listed in that Annex which directly impairs a legal interest protected in those conventions should also form part of the adverse human rights impact covered by this Directive, provided that the company concerned could have reasonably established the risk of such impairment and any appropriate measures to be taken in order to comply with the due diligence obligations under

(25) In order to achieve a meaningful contribution to the sustainability transition, due diligence under this Directive should be carried out with respect to adverse human rights impact on persons resulting from any action or omission which ends or reduces the ability of an individual or a group to enjoy the rights and be protected by prohibitions as enshrined in the international instruments and conventions as listed in the Annex to this Directive. In order to ensure a comprehensive coverage of human rights, a negative impact on the enjoyment of a right not specifically listed in that Annex which directly impairs a legal interest protected in those conventions should also form part of the adverse human rights impact covered by this Directive. That Annex should be reviewed on a regular basis and be consistent with the Union’s objectives on this Directive, taking into account all relevant circumstances of their operations, such as the sector and operational context. Due diligence should further encompass adverse environmental impacts resulting from the violation of one of the prohibitions and obligations pursuant to the international environmental conventions listed in the Annex to this Directive.

In order to ensure clarity for companies, in particular the steps of preventing and mitigating potential adverse impacts and of bringing to an end, or when this is not possible, minimising actual adverse impacts should be clearly distinguished in this Directive.

(30) Under the due diligence obligations set out by this Directive, a company should identify and assess actual or potential adverse impacts on human rights, the environment and good governance. In order to allow for a comprehensive identification of adverse impacts, such identification should be based on meaningful stakeholders engagement company should obtain information about baseline conditions at higher risk sites or facilities in value chains. Identification of adverse impacts should include assessing the human rights, and environmental context in a dynamic way and in regular intervals: prior to a new activity or relationship, prior to major decisions or changes in the operation; in response to or anticipation of changes in the operating environment; and periodically, at least every 12 months, throughout the life of an activity or relationship. Regulated financial undertakings providing loan, credit, or other financial services should identify the adverse impacts only at the inception of the contract. When identifying adverse impacts, companies should also identify and assess the impact of a business relationship’s business model and strategies, including trading, procurement and pricing practices. Where the company cannot prevent, bring to an end or minimize all its adverse impacts at the same time, it should be able to prioritize its action, provided it takes the measures reasonably available to the company, taking into account the specific circumstances.

In line with international standards, prevention and mitigation as well as bringing to an end and minimisation of adverse impacts should take into account the interests of those adversely impacted. In order to enable continuous engagement with the value chain business partner instead of termination of business relations (disengagement) and possibly exacerbating adverse impacts, this Directive should ensure that disengagement is a last-resort action, in line with the Union’s policy of zero-tolerance on child labour.

Terminating a business relationship in which child labour was found could expose the child to even more severe adverse human rights impacts. This should therefore be taken into account when deciding on the appropriate action to take.

So as to comply with the prevention and mitigation obligation under this Directive, companies should be required to take the following actions, where relevant. Where necessary due to the complexity of prevention measures, companies should develop and implement a prevention action plan. Companies should seek to obtain contractual assurances from a direct partner with whom they have an established business relationship that it will ensure compliance with the code of conduct or the prevention action plan, including by seeking corresponding contractual assurances.

Disengagement should be foreseen when the potential adverse impact is linked to a systemic and state organised oppression and consequently cannot be prevented by the actions of the company and when the company assesses that terminating the business relationship would not create greater adverse impact than the one it intends to prevent or mitigate.
assurances from its partners to the extent that their activities are part of the companies’ value chain. The contractual assurances should be accompanied by appropriate measures to verify compliance. To ensure comprehensive prevention of actual and potential adverse impacts, companies should also make investments which aim to prevent adverse impacts, provide targeted and proportionate support for an SME with which they have an established business relationship such as financing, for example, through direct financing, low-interest loans, guarantees of continued sourcing, and assistance in securing financing, to help implement the code of conduct or prevention action plan, or technical guidance such as in the form of training, management systems upgrading, and collaborate with other companies.

potential impacts without success.

However, the Directive should also, for cases where potential adverse impacts could not be addressed by the described prevention or mitigation measures, refer to the obligation for companies to refrain from entering into new or extending existing relations with the partner in question and, where the law governing their relations so entitles them to, to either temporarily suspend commercial relationships with the partner in question, while pursuing prevention and minimisation efforts, if there is reasonable expectation that these efforts are to succeed in the short-term; or to terminate the business relationship with respect to the activities concerned if the potential adverse impact is severe. In order to allow companies to fulfil that obligation, Member States should provide for the availability of an option to temporarily suspend or terminate the business relationship in contracts governed by their laws. It is possible that prevention of adverse impacts at the level of indirect business relationships requires collaboration with another company, for example a company which has a direct contractual relationship with the supplier. In some instances, such collaboration could be the only realistic way of preventing adverse impacts, in particular, where the indirect business relationship is not ready to enter into a contract with the company. In these instances, the company should collaborate with the entity which can most effectively prevent or mitigate adverse impacts at the level of the indirect business relationship while respecting competition law.

Recital 38
(38) Under the due diligence obligations set out by this Directive, if a company identifies actual human rights or environmental adverse impacts, it should take appropriate measures to bring those to an end. It can be expected that a company is able to bring to an end actual adverse impacts in their own operations and in subsidiaries. However, it should be clarified that, as regards established business relationships, where adverse impacts cannot be brought to an end, companies should minimise the extent of such impacts. Minimisation of the extent of adverse impacts should require an outcome that is the closest possible to bringing the adverse impact to an end. To provide companies with legal clarity and certainty, this Directive should define which actions companies should be required to take for bringing actual human rights and environmental adverse impacts to an end and minimisation of their extent, where relevant depending on the circumstances.

(38) Under the due diligence obligations set out by this Directive, if a company identifies actual adverse impacts on human rights, the environment or good governance, it should take appropriate measures to bring those to an end. It can be expected that a company is able to bring to an end actual adverse impacts in their own operations and in subsidiaries. However, it should be clarified that where adverse impacts cannot be brought to an end, companies should mitigate the impacts and provide for or co-operate in the remediation of the impact directly to the affected persons or communities. Mitigation of adverse impacts should require an outcome that is the closest possible to bringing the adverse impact to an end. Remediation should aim to restore the affected persons to the situation they would be in, had the adverse impact not occurred (if possible) and be proportionate to the significance and scale of the adverse impact and to the contribution of the company’s conduct to the adverse impact. To provide companies with legal clarity and certainty, this Directive should define which actions companies should be required to take for bringing actual human rights, environmental and good governance adverse impacts to an end and remediation. Remedial actions should be determined on the basis of meaningful engagement with affected stakeholders and may include restitution or rehabilitation, apologies, financial or non-financial compensation, assessing whether vulnerable stakeholders benefit equitably in compensation payments or other forms of restitution. Companies should provide guarantees that they will not allow adverse impacts to recur. They should neutralise the adverse impact or minimise its extent, with an action proportionate to the significance and scale of the adverse impact and to the contribution of the company’s conduct to the adverse impact. Where necessary due to the fact that the adverse impact cannot be immediately brought to an end, companies should develop and implement a corrective action plan with reasonable and clearly defined timelines for action and qualitative and quantitative indicators for measuring improvement. Companies should also seek to obtain contractual assurances from a direct business partner with whom they have an established business relationship that they will ensure compliance with the company’s code of conduct and, as necessary, a prevention action plan, including by seeking corresponding contractual assurances from its partners, to the extent that their activities are part of the company’s value chain. The contractual assurances should be accompanied by the appropriate measures to verify compliance. The aim is nevertheless to mitigate financial or administrative burden on SMEs, many of which are already struggling in the context of the global economic and sanitary crisis. In order to support SMEs, Member States should set up and operate, either individually or jointly, dedicated websites, portals or platforms, and Member States could also financially support SMEs and help them build capacity. Such support should also be made accessible, and where necessary adapted and extended to upstream economic operators in third countries.

Amendment

(47) Although most SMEs are not included in the scope of this Directive, they could be impacted by its provisions as contractors or subcontractors to the companies which are in the scope. SMEs that are not in the scope but decide to voluntarily comply with due diligence obligations in line with this Directive should be incentivised to do so and rewarded for doing so. To this end, Member States are, for instance, encouraged to set up labelling systems to identify complying SMEs. In order to mitigate financial or administrative burden on SMEs, many of which are already struggling in the context of the global economic and sanitary crisis and to support them, Member States should set up and operate, either individually or jointly, dedicated websites, portals or platforms. Such support should also be made accessible, and where necessary adapted and extended to upstream economic operators in third countries. Member States should also financially support SMEs, through dedicated funding, provide technical assistance to help them comply with due diligence requirements and help them build capacity. Companies whose business partner is an SME, are also encouraged to support them to comply with due diligence measures, in case such requirements would jeopardize the viability of the SME and use fair, reasonable, non-discriminatory and proportionate requirements vis-à-vis the SMEs.

OPINION OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL TRADE

for the Committee on Legal Affairs

Rapporteur for opinion (*): Barry Andrews

(*) Associated committee – Rule 57 of the Rules of Procedure’

AMENDMENTS

The Committee on International Trade calls on the Committee on Legal Affairs, as the committee responsible, to take into account the following amendments:

Amendment 1

Proposal for a directive

Recital 18

Text proposed by the Commission

(18) The value chain should cover activities related to the production of a good or provision of services by a company, including the development of the product or the service and the use and disposal of the product as well as the related activities of established business relationships of the company. It should encompass upstream established direct and indirect business relationships that design, extract, manufacture, transport, store and supply raw material, products, parts of products, or provide services to the company that are necessary to carry out the company’s activities, and also

Amendment

(18) The value chain should cover activities of a company and of its business partners related to the production and supply of goods or the provision of services, including upstream direct and indirect business partners that design, extract, manufacture, transport, store and supply raw material, products, parts of products, or provide services to the company including the development of the product or the service, and downstream direct and indirect business partners that distribute the product to wholesalers, retailers or consumers, transport and store the product, dismantle or recycle the downstream relationships, including established direct and indirect business relationships, that use or receive products, parts of products or services from the company up to the end of life of the product, including inter alia the distribution of the product to retailers, the transport and storage of the product, dismantling of the product, its recycling, composting or landfilling.

Amendment 2

Proposal for a directive
Recital 21

(recital 21) Under this Directive, EU companies with more than 500 employees on average and a worldwide net turnover exceeding EUR 150 million in the financial year preceding the last financial year should be required to comply with due diligence. As regards companies which do not fulfil those criteria, but which had more than 250 employees on average and more than EUR 40 million worldwide net turnover in the financial year preceding the last financial year and which operate in one or more high-impact sectors, due diligence should apply 2 years after the end of the transposition period of this directive, in order to provide for a longer adaptation period. In order to ensure a proportionate burden, companies operating in such high-impact sectors should be required to comply with more targeted due diligence focusing on severe adverse impacts.

Temporary agency workers, including those posted under Article 1(3), point (c), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council, should be included in the calculation of the number of employees in the user company. Posted workers under Article 1(3), points (a) and (b), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU, should only be included in the calculation of the number of employees of the sending company.

(a) and (b), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU, should only be included in the calculation of the number of employees of the sending company.

Amendment 3

Proposal for a directive
Recital 22

Text proposed by the Commission

(22) In order to reflect the priority areas of international action aimed at tackling human rights and environmental issues, the selection of high-impact sectors for the purposes of this Directive should be based on existing sectoral OECD due diligence guidance. The following sectors should be regarded as high-impact for the purposes of this Directive: the manufacture of textiles, leather and related products (including footwear), and the wholesale trade of textiles, clothing and footwear; agriculture, forestry, fisheries (including aquaculture), the manufacture of food products, and the wholesale trade of agricultural raw materials, live animals, wood, food, and beverages; the extraction of mineral resources regardless of where they are extracted from (including crude petroleum, natural gas, coal, lignite, metals and metal ores, as well as all other, non-metallic minerals and quarry products), the manufacture of basic metal products, other non-metallic mineral products and fabricated metal products (except machinery and equipment), and the wholesale trade of mineral resources, basic

The following sectors should be regarded as high-impact for the purposes of this Directive: the manufacture of textiles, leather and related products (including footwear), and the wholesale trade of textiles, clothing and footwear; agriculture, forestry, fisheries (including aquaculture), the manufacture of food products, and the wholesale trade of agricultural raw materials, live animals, wood, food, and beverages; the extraction of mineral resources regardless of where they are extracted from (including crude petroleum, natural gas, coal, lignite, metals and metal ores, as well as all other, non-metallic minerals and quarry products), the manufacture of basic metal products, other non-metallic mineral products and fabricated metal products (except machinery and equipment), and the wholesale trade of mineral resources, basic and intermediate mineral products (including metals and metal ores, construction materials, fuels, chemicals and other intermediate products). As regards the financial sector, due to its specificities, in particular as regards the value chain and the services offered, even if it is covered by sector-specific OECD guidance, it should not form part of the high-impact sectors covered by this Directive. At the same time, in this sector, the broader coverage of actual and potential adverse impacts should be ensured by also including very large companies in the scope that are regulated financial undertakings, even if they do not have a legal form with limited liability.

Amendment 4

Proposal for a directive
Recital 23

Text proposed by the Commission

(23) In order to achieve fully the objectives of this Directive addressing human rights and adverse environmental impacts with respect to companies’ operations, subsidiaries and value chains, third-country companies with significant operations in the EU should also be covered. More specifically, the Directive should apply to third-country companies which generated a net turnover of at least EUR 150 million in the Union in the financial year preceding the last financial year or a net turnover of more than EUR 40 million but less than EUR 150 million in the financial year preceding the last financial year in one or more of the high-impact sectors, as of 2 years after the end of the transposition period of this Directive.

Amendment

(23) In order to achieve fully the objectives of this Directive addressing human rights and adverse environmental impacts with respect to companies’ operations, subsidiaries and value chains, third-country companies with significant operations in the EU should also be covered. More specifically, the Directive should apply to third-country companies which generated a net turnover of more than EUR 40 million in the Union in the financial year preceding the last financial year or a net turnover of more than EUR 8 million but less than EUR 40 million in the financial year preceding the last financial year in one or more of the high-impact sectors, as of 2 years after the end of the transposition period of this Directive.
Amendment 5

Proposal for a directive
Recital 36

Text proposed by the Commission

(36) In order to ensure that prevention and mitigation of potential adverse impacts is effective, companies should prioritize engagement with business relationships in the value chain, instead of terminating the business relationship, as a last resort action after attempting at preventing and mitigating adverse potential impacts without success. However, the Directive should also, for cases where potential adverse impacts could not be addressed by the described prevention or mitigation measures, refer to the obligation for companies to refrain from entering into new or extending existing relations with the partner in question and, where the law governing their relations so entitles them to, to either temporarily suspend commercial relationships with the partner in question, while pursuing prevention and minimisation efforts, if there is reasonable expectation that these efforts are to succeed in the short-term; or to terminate the business relationship with respect to the activities concerned if the potential adverse impact is severe. In order to allow companies to fulfil that obligation, Member States should provide for the availability of an option to temporarily suspend commercial relationships with another company, for example a company which has a direct contractual relationship with the supplier. In some instances, such collaboration could be the only realistic way of preventing adverse impacts, in particular, where the indirect business relationship is not ready to enter into a contract with the company. In these instances, the company should

However, the Directive should also, for cases where potential adverse impacts could not be addressed by the described prevention or mitigation measures, refer to the obligation for companies to refrain from entering into new or extending existing relations with the partner in question in connection to or in the value chain of which the impact has arisen and, where the law governing their relations so entitles them to and if they are in the best interest of the potential victims of the potential or actual adverse impacts, in line with responsible disengagement to temporarily suspend commercial relationships with the partner in question, while pursuing appropriate efforts to bring to an end or mitigate the extent of the adverse impact, or as a last resort to terminate the business relationship with respect to the activities concerned if the potential adverse impact is severe, systemic or state-sponsored. In order to allow companies to fulfil that obligation, Member States should provide for the availability of an option to terminate the business relationship in contracts governed by their laws. It is possible that prevention of adverse impacts at the level of indirect business relationships requires collaboration with another company, for example a company which has a direct contractual relationship with the supplier. Recital 41

Text proposed by the Commission

(41) In order to ensure that bringing actual adverse impacts to an end or minimising them is effective, companies should prioritize engagement with business relationships in the value chain, instead of terminating the business relationship, as a last resort action after attempting at bringing actual adverse impacts to an end or minimising them without success. However, this Directive should also, for cases where actual adverse impacts could not be brought to an end or adequately mitigated by the described measures, refer to the obligation for companies to refrain from entering into new or extending existing relationships with the partner in question and, where the law governing their relations so entitles them to, to either temporarily suspend commercial relationships with the partner in question, while pursuing efforts to bring to an end or minimise the extent of the adverse impact, or terminate the business relationship with respect to the activities concerned, if the adverse impact is considered severe. a timely, efficient and meaningful manner with stakeholders, including workers and their legitimate representatives impacted by the decision to disengage before reaching this decision, and should address the adverse impacts related to the decision to disengage.

Amendment 7

Proposal for a directive
Recital 42

Text proposed by the Commission

(42) Companies should provide the possibility for persons and organisations to submit complaints directly to them in case of legitimate concerns regarding actual or potential human rights and environmental adverse impacts. Organisations who could submit such complaints should include trade unions and other workers’ representatives representing individuals working in the value chain concerned and civil society organisations active in the areas related to the value chain concerned where they have knowledge about a potential or actual adverse impact. Companies should establish a procedure for dealing with those complaints and inform workers, trade unions and other workers’ representatives, where relevant, about such processes. Recourse to the complaints and remediation mechanism should not prevent the complainant from having recourse to judicial remedies. In accordance with international standards, complaints should be entitled to request from the company appropriate follow-up on the complaint and to meet with the company’s representatives at an appropriate level to discuss potential or actual severe adverse impacts that are the subject matter of the complaint. This access should not lead to unreasonable solicitations of companies.

Amendment

(42) Companies should provide the possibility for persons and organisations to submit notifications or complaints directly to them in case of legitimate concerns regarding actual or potential human rights, environmental impacts or good governance impacts with respect to their value chain, their own operations, the operations of their subsidiaries and their business partners. Organisations who could submit such complaints should include the company’s employees, the employees of its subsidiaries, workers, trade unions, civil society organisations and other workers’ representatives representing individuals working in the value chain concerned and civil society organisations active in the areas related to the value chain concerned where they have knowledge about a potential or actual adverse impact. Companies should establish a safe, legitimate, accessible and equitable procedure for dealing with those complaints and inform workers, trade unions and other workers’ representatives, where relevant, about such processes. Recourse to the complaints and remediation mechanism should not preclude the complainant from having recourse to judicial remedies. In accordance with international standards, complaints should be entitled to request from the company appropriate follow-up on the complaint and to meet with the company’s representatives at an appropriate level to discuss potential or actual severe adverse impacts that are the subject matter of the complaint. This access should not lead to unreasonable solicitations of companies.

Amendment 8

Proposal for a directive
Recital 47

Text proposed by the Commission

(47) Although SMEs are not included in the scope of this Directive, they could be impacted by its provisions as contractors or subcontractors to the companies which are in the scope. The aim is nevertheless to mitigate financial or administrative burden on SMEs, many of which are already struggling in the context of the global economic and sanitary crisis. In order to support SMEs, Member States should set up and operate, either individually or jointly, dedicated websites, portals or platforms, and Member States could also financially support SMEs and help them build capacity. Such support should also be made accessible, and where necessary adapted and extended to upstream economic operators in third countries. Companies whose business partner is an SME, are also encouraged to support them to comply with due diligence measures, in case such requirements would jeopardize the viability of the SME and use fair, reasonable, non-discriminatory and proportionate requirements vis-a-vis the SMEs.

AMENDMENTS

The Committee on Economic and Monetary Affairs calls on the Committee on Legal Affairs, as the committee responsible, to take into account the following amendments:

Amendment 1

Proposal for a directive
Recital 4

Text proposed by the Commission

(4) The behaviour of companies across all sectors of the economy is key to success in the Union’s sustainability objectives as Union companies, especially large ones, rely on global value chains. It is also in the interest of companies to protect human rights and the environment, in particular given the rising concern of consumers and investors regarding these topics. Several initiatives fostering enterprises which support value-oriented transformation already exist on Union77, as well as national78 level.

It is also in the interest of companies to respect human rights and the environment, in particular given the rising concern of consumers and investors regarding these topics. Several initiatives fostering enterprises which support value-oriented transformation already exist on Union77, as well as national78 level. Further, binding due diligence legislation has been implemented in Member States such as France and Germany which heightens the need for a level playing field for companies to avoid fragmentation and to provide legal certainty for businesses operating in the single market.

Amendment 2

Proposal for a directive
Recital 5

Text proposed by the Commission

(5) Existing international standards on responsible business conduct specify that companies should protect human rights and set out how they should address the protection of the environment across their operations and value chains. The United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights\(^79\) recognise the responsibility of companies to exercise human rights due diligence by identifying, preventing and mitigating the adverse impacts of their operations on human rights and by accounting for how they address those impacts. Those Guiding Principles state that businesses should avoid infringing human rights and should address adverse human rights impacts that they have caused, contributed to or are linked with in their own operations, subsidiaries and through their direct and indirect business relationships.

Amendment

(5) Well-established existing international standards on responsible business conduct such as the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and the OECD Guidelines for Due Diligence specify that companies should respect human rights and set out how they should address the protection of the environment across their operations and value chains. The United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights\(^79\) recognise the responsibility of companies to exercise human rights due diligence by identifying, preventing and mitigating the adverse impacts of their operations on human rights and by accounting for how they address those impacts. Those Guiding Principles state that businesses should avoid infringing human rights and should address adverse human rights impacts that they have caused, contributed to or are linked with in their own operations, subsidiaries and through their direct and indirect business relationships.

Amendment 3

Proposal for a directive
Recital 15

Text proposed by the Commission

(15) Companies should take appropriate steps to set up and carry out due diligence measures, with respect to their own operations, their subsidiaries, as well as their established direct and indirect business relationships throughout their value chains in accordance with the provisions of this Directive. This Directive should not require companies to guarantee, in all circumstances, that adverse impacts will never occur or that they will be stopped. For example with respect to business relationships where the adverse impact results from State intervention, the company might not be in a position to arrive at such results. Therefore, the main obligations in this Directive should be ‘obligations of means’. The company should take the appropriate measures which can reasonably be expected to result in prevention or minimisation of the adverse impact under the circumstances of the specific case. Account should be taken of the specificities of the company’s value chain, sector or geographical area in which its value chain partners operate, the company’s power to influence its direct and indirect business relationships, and whether the company could increase its power of influence.

Amendment 4
Proposal for a directive
Recital 17 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(17a) Global value chains, in particular critical raw materials value chains, are impacted by detrimental effects of natural or man-made hazards. The risks in critical value chains have been made apparent by the COVID-19 crisis while the frequency and impact of those shocks are likely to increase in the future, constituting a driver for inflation and leading to a subsequent increase of macroeconomic volatility as well as market and trade uncertainty. To address this, the EU should establish resilience stress tests for companies, akin to the stress tests for financial institutions, that would map, assess and provide potential responses to their value chain risks, including externalities as well as social, environmental and political risks.

Amendment 5
Proposal for a directive
Recital 18

Text proposed by the Commission

(18) The value chain should cover activities related to the production of a good or provision of services by a company, including the development of the product or the service and the use and disposal of the product as well as the related activities of established business relationships of the company. Amendment

(18) The value chain should cover activities related to the production of a good or provision of services by a company, including the development of the product or the service and the use and disposal of the product as well as the related activities of business relationships of the company. It should encompass upstream direct and indirect business relationships that design, extract, manufacture, transport, store and supply raw material, products, parts of products, or provide services to the company that are necessary to carry out the company’s company’s activities, and also downstream relationships, including established direct and indirect business relationships, that use or receive products, parts of products or services from the company up to the end of life of the product, including inter alia the distribution of the product to retailers, the transport and storage of the product, dismantling of the product, its recycling, composting or landfilling.

Amendment 6

Proposal for a directive
Recital 19

Text proposed by the Commission

(19) As regards regulated financial undertakings providing loan, credit, or other financial services, “value chain” with respect to the provision of such services should be limited to the activities of the clients receiving such services, and the subsidiaries thereof whose activities are linked to the contract in question. Clients that are households and natural persons not acting in a professional or business capacity, as well as small and medium sized undertakings, should not be considered to be part of the value chain. The activities of the companies or other legal entities that are included in the value chain of that client should not be covered.

Amendment

(19) As regards regulated financial undertakings providing loan, credit, or other financial services, linked to the conclusion of a contract “value chain” with respect to the provision of such services should include the activities of the clients receiving such services, the subsidiaries thereof whose activities are linked to the contract in question and the impacts of the clients and other companies belonging to the same group. Clients that are households and natural persons not acting in a professional or business capacity, as well as small and medium sized undertakings, should not be considered to be part of the value chain of regulated financial undertakings. However, a financial undertaking may, on a voluntary basis, decide to cover SMEs in its value chain. The activities of the companies or other legal entities that are included in the value chain of that client should not by priority be covered to avoid the overlap of due diligence exercises of regulated financial undertakings that have partially overlapping value chains.

Amendment 7

PE738.450v02-00 300/663 RR\1278479EN.docx
Proposal for a directive
Recital 20

Text proposed by the Commission

(20) In order to allow companies to properly identify the adverse impacts in their value chain and to make it possible for them to exercise appropriate leverage, the due diligence obligations should be limited in this Directive to established business relationships. For the purpose of this Directive, established business relationships should mean such direct and indirect business relationships which are, or which are expected to be lasting, in view of their intensity and duration and which do not represent a negligible or ancillary part of the value chain. The nature of business relationships as “established” should be reassessed periodically, and at least every 12 months. If the direct business relationship of a company is established, then all linked indirect business relationships should also be considered as established regarding that company.

Amendment 8

Proposal for a directive
Recital 25

Text proposed by the Commission

(25) In order to achieve a meaningful contribution to the sustainability transition, due diligence under this Directive should be carried out with respect to adverse human rights impact on protected persons resulting from the violation of one of the rights and prohibitions as enshrined in the international conventions as listed in the Annex to this Directive. In order to ensure a comprehensive coverage of human rights, a violation of a prohibition or right not specifically listed in that Annex which directly impairs a legal interest protected in those conventions should also form part of the adverse human rights impact covered by this Directive, provided that the company concerned could have reasonably established the risk of such impairment and any appropriate measures to be taken in order to comply with the due diligence obligations under this Directive, taking into account all relevant circumstances of their operations, such as the sector and operational context. Due diligence should further encompass adverse environmental impacts resulting from the violation of one of the prohibitions and obligations pursuant to the international environmental conventions listed in the Annex to this Directive.

violation of a prohibition or right not specifically listed in these guidelines which directly impairs a legal interest protected in international conventions should also form part of the adverse human rights impact covered by this Directive, provided that the company concerned could have reasonably established the risk of such impairment and any appropriate measures to be taken in order to comply with the due diligence obligations under this Directive, taking into account all relevant circumstances of their operations, such as the sector and operational context. Due diligence should further encompass adverse environmental impacts resulting from the violation of one of the prohibitions and obligations pursuant to the international environmental conventions listed in the OECD Due Diligence Guidance for Responsible Business Conduct and the UN Guiding Principles for Business and Human Rights.

Amendment 9

Proposal for a directive
Recital 27

Text proposed by the Commission

(27) In order to conduct appropriate human rights, and environmental due diligence with respect to their operations, their subsidiaries, and their value chains, companies covered by this Directive should integrate due diligence into corporate policies, identify, prevent and mitigate as well as bring to an end and minimise the extent of potential and actual adverse human rights and environmental impacts, establish and maintain a complaints procedure, monitor the effectiveness of the taken measures in accordance with the requirements that are set up in this Directive and communicate publicly on their due diligence. In order to ensure clarity for companies, in particular the steps of preventing and mitigating potential adverse impacts and of bringing to an end, or when this is not possible, minimising actual adverse impacts should be clearly distinguished in this Directive.

Amendment 10
Proposal for a directive
Recital 27 a (new)

\textit{Text proposed by the Commission}

(27a) In line with the OECD Due Diligence Guidance for Responsible Business Conduct, meaningful stakeholder engagement is a key component of the due diligence process. The consultation and involvement of stakeholders can help companies to identify risks more precisely and to set up a more effective due diligence strategy. Therefore, the consultation and involvement of stakeholders should be required in all stages of the due diligence process. Their involvement and consultation may help to push back against pressure from financial markets and short-term investors and give voice to those with a strong interest in the long-term sustainability of the company.

Amendment 11
Proposal for a directive
Recital 27 b (new)

\textit{Text proposed by the Commission}

(27b) Companies should provide meaningful information to stakeholders about actual and potential adverse human rights, environmental and climate impacts of particular operations, projects and in a timely and accessible manner taking into account specificities of different stakeholders. Companies must respect the rights of Indigenous Peoples, as laid out in the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples, including free, prior and informed consent and indigenous peoples’ right to self-determination.

Amendment 12
Proposal for a directive
Recital 28

Text proposed by the Commission

(28) In order to ensure that due diligence forms part of companies’ corporate policies, and in line with the relevant international framework, companies should integrate due diligence into all their corporate policies and have in place a due diligence policy. The due diligence policy should contain a description of the company’s approach, including in the long term, to due diligence, a code of conduct describing the rules and principles to be followed by the company’s employees and subsidiaries; a description of the processes put in place to implement due diligence, including the measures taken to verify compliance with the code of conduct and to extend its application to established business relationships. The code of conduct should apply in all relevant corporate functions and operations, including procurement and purchasing decisions. Companies should also update their due diligence policy annually.

Amendment

(28) In order to ensure that due diligence forms part of companies’ corporate policies, and in line with the relevant international framework, companies should integrate and carry out due diligence into all their corporate policies and have in place a due diligence policy. The due diligence policy should contain a description of the company’s approach, including in the short, medium and long term, to due diligence, a code of conduct describing the rules and principles to be followed by the company’s employees and subsidiaries; a description of the processes put in place to implement due diligence, including the measures taken to verify compliance with the code of conduct and to extend its application to business relationships. The code of conduct should apply in all relevant corporate functions and operations, including procurement and purchasing decisions. Companies should also update and publish their due diligence policy annually.

Amendment 13
Proposal for a directive
Recital 30
Under the due diligence obligations set out by this Directive, a company should identify actual or potential adverse human rights and environmental impacts. In order to allow for a comprehensive identification of adverse impacts, such identification should be based on quantitative and qualitative information. For instance, as regards adverse environmental impacts, the company should obtain information about baseline conditions at higher risk sites or facilities in value chains. Identification of adverse impacts should include assessing the human rights, and environmental context in a dynamic way and in regular intervals: prior to a new activity or relationship, prior to major decisions or changes in the operation; in response to or anticipation of changes in the operating environment; and periodically, at least every 12 months, throughout the life of an activity or relationship. Regulated financial undertakings providing loan, credit, or other financial services should identify the adverse impacts only at the inception of the contract. When identifying adverse impacts, companies should also identify and assess the impact of a business relationship’s business model and strategies, including trading, procurement and pricing practices. Where the company cannot prevent, bring to an end or minimize all its adverse impacts at the same time, it should be able to prioritize its action, provided it takes the measures reasonably available to the company, taking into account the specific circumstances.

(31) In order to avoid undue burden on the smaller companies operating in high-impact sectors which are covered by this Directive, those companies should only be obliged to identify those actual or potential severe adverse impacts that are relevant to the respective sector.

(31) In order to avoid undue burden on SMEs covered by this Directive, those companies should be supported with adequate and targeted measures and tools.

Amendment 15

Proposal for a directive
Recital 32

Text proposed by the Commission

(32) In line with international standards, prevention and mitigation as well as bringing to an end and minimisation of adverse impacts should take into account the interests of those adversely impacted. In order to enable continuous engagement with the value chain business partner instead of termination of business relations (disengagement) and possibly exacerbating adverse impacts, this Directive should ensure that disengagement is a last-resort action, in line with the Union’s policy of zero-tolerance on child labour. Terminating a business relationship in which child labour was found could expose the child to even more severe adverse human rights impacts. This should therefore be taken into account when deciding on the appropriate action to take.

(32) In line with international standards, prevention and mitigation as well as bringing to an end and minimisation of adverse impacts should take into account the interests of those adversely impacted. In order to enable continuous engagement with the value chain business partner instead of termination of business relations (disengagement) and possibly exacerbating adverse impacts, this Directive should ensure that disengagement is a last-resort action used only in cases of severe or repeated infringements of obligations under this Directive, after repeated attempts at measures of risk mitigation have failed and only if it is in the best interest of those impacted (responsible disengagement), also in line with the Union’s policy of zero-tolerance on child labour. Terminating a business relationship in which child labour was found could expose the child to even more severe adverse human rights impacts. This should therefore be taken into account when deciding on the appropriate action to take. Moreover, disengagement should also take into account possible impacts for those depending on the product or affected by disruptions of supply chains.
Amendment 16

Proposal for a directive
Recital 34

Text proposed by the Commission

(34) So as to comply with the prevention and mitigation obligation under this Directive, companies should be required to take the following actions, where relevant. Where necessary due to the complexity of prevention measures, companies should develop and implement a prevention action plan. Companies should seek to obtain contractual assurances from a direct partner with whom they have an established business relationship that it will ensure compliance with the code of conduct or prevention action plan, where necessary due to the complexity of prevention measures, companies should develop and implement a prevention action plan. Where necessary due to the complexity of prevention measures, companies should develop and implement a prevention action plan. Companies may seek to obtain contractual assurances from a direct partner with whom they have business relationship that it will ensure compliance with the code of conduct or prevention action plan, including by seeking corresponding contractual assurances. Companies may seek to obtain contractual assurances from a direct partner with whom they have business relationship that it will ensure compliance with the code of conduct or prevention action plan, including by seeking corresponding contractual assurances. However, relying on contractual assurances does not exclude the possibility of a company to be in breach of its due diligence obligations. It should also be noted that for some companies, including institutional investors, contractual assurances are difficult to obtain because they typically do not have a contractual relationship with an investee company. The contractual assurances from its partners to the extent that their activities are part of the companies’ value chain where possible. The contractual assurances should be, where possible accompanied by appropriate measures to verify compliance. To ensure comprehensive prevention of actual and potential adverse impacts, companies should also make investments which aim to prevent adverse impacts, provide targeted and proportionate support for an SME with which they have an established business relationship such as financing, for example, through direct financing, low-interest loans, guarantees of continued sourcing, and assistance in securing financing, to help implement the code of conduct or prevention action plan, or technical guidance such as in the form of training, management systems upgrading, and collaborate with other companies.

(35) In order to reflect the full range of options for the company in cases where potential impacts could not be addressed by the described prevention or minimisation measures, this Directive should also refer to the possibility for the company to seek to conclude a contract with the indirect business partner, with a view to achieving compliance with the company’s code of conduct or a prevention action plan, and conduct appropriate measures to verify compliance of the indirect business relationship with the contract.

Amendment

(35) In order to reflect the full range of options for the company in cases where there is knowledge of severe adverse impacts could not be addressed by the described prevention or minimisation measures in indirect business relationships outside the EU, this Directive should also refer to the possibility for the company to seek to conclude a contract with the indirect business partner, with a view to achieving compliance with the company’s code of conduct or a prevention action plan, and conduct appropriate measures to verify compliance of the indirect business relationship with the contract. This possibility should be taken into account on an ad-hoc basis.

Recital 36

Text proposed by the Commission

(36) In order to ensure that prevention and mitigation of potential adverse impacts is effective, companies should prioritize engagement with business relationships in the value chain, instead of terminating the business relationship, as a last resort action after attempting at preventing and mitigating adverse potential impacts without success. However, the Directive should also, for cases where potential prevention action plan, or technical guidance such as in the form of training, management systems upgrading, and collaborate with other companies.

Amendment

(36) In order to ensure that prevention and mitigation of potential adverse impacts is effective, companies should prioritize engagement with business relationships in the value chain, instead of terminating the business relationship, as a last resort action after attempting at preventing and mitigating adverse potential impacts without success. However, the Directive should also, for cases where potential adverse impacts could not be addressed by the described prevention or mitigation measures, refer to the obligation for companies to refrain from entering into new or extending existing relations with the partner in question and, where the law governing their relations so entitles them to, to either temporarily suspend commercial relationships with the partner in question, while pursuing prevention and minimisation efforts, if there is reasonable expectation that these efforts are to succeed in the short-term; or to terminate the business relationship with respect to the activities concerned if the potential adverse impact is severe. In order to allow companies to fulfil that obligation, Member States should provide for the availability of an option to terminate the business relationship in contracts governed by their laws. It is possible that prevention of adverse impacts at the level of indirect business relationships requires collaboration with another company, for example a company which has a direct contractual relationship with the supplier. In some instances, such collaboration could be the only realistic way of preventing adverse impacts, in particular, where the indirect business relationship is not ready to enter into a contract with the company. In these instances, the company should collaborate with the entity which can most effectively prevent or mitigate adverse impacts at the level of the indirect business relationship while respecting competition law.

Amendment

(38) Under the due diligence obligations set out by this Directive, if a company identifies actual human rights or environmental adverse impacts, it should take appropriate measures to bring those to an end. It can be expected that a company is able to bring to an end actual adverse impacts in their own operations and in subsidiaries. However, it should be clarified that, as regards established business relationships, where adverse impacts cannot be brought to an end, companies should minimise the extent of such impacts. Minimisation of the extent of adverse impacts should require an outcome that is the closest possible to bringing the adverse impact to an end. To provide companies with legal clarity and certainty, this Directive should define which actions companies should be required to take for bringing actual human rights and environmental adverse impacts to an end and minimisation of their extent, where relevant depending on the circumstances.

The contractual assurances should be accompanied by the appropriate measures to verify compliance. Finally, companies should also make investments aiming at ceasing or minimising the extent of adverse impact, provide targeted and proportionate support for an SMEs with which they have a business relationship and collaborate with other entities, including, where relevant, to increase the company’s ability to bring the adverse impact to an end.

Organisations who could submit such complaints should include trade unions and other workers’ representatives representing individuals working in the value chain concerned and civil society organisations active in the areas related to the value chain concerned where they have knowledge about a potential or actual adverse impact. Companies should establish a procedure for dealing with those complaints and inform workers, trade unions and other workers’ representatives, where relevant, about such processes. Recourse to the complaints and remediation mechanism should not prevent the complainant from having recourse to judicial remedies. (42a) *If a company is causing or contributing to an actual or potential adverse impact, it should prevent or mitigate the impact, use its leverage and remediate or contribute to remediating the harm. Companies that are linked to an actual or potential adverse impact without causing or contributing to it, should make use of their leverage to the greatest extent possible to mitigate the impact and should assist in remedy. (43) Companies should monitor the implementation and effectiveness of their due diligence measures. They should carry out periodic assessments of their own operations, those of their subsidiaries and, where related to the value chains of the company, those of their established business relationships, to monitor the effectiveness of the identification, prevention, minimisation, bringing to an end and mitigation of human rights and environmental adverse impacts. Such assessments should verify that adverse impacts are properly identified, due diligence measures are implemented and adverse impacts have actually been prevented or brought to an end. In order to ensure that such assessments are up-to-date, they should be carried out at least every 12 months and be revised in-between if there are reasonable grounds to believe that significant new risks of adverse impact could have arisen. Financial undertakings should assess the company before providing the financial service and, where appropriate, after the provision of the service if it can be reasonably expected that the company in question is causing or contributing to an adverse impact. The appropriate frequency of verification in a given time period implied by the term 'regularly' should be determined in relation to the likelihood and severity of adverse impacts. The more likely and severe the impacts, the more regularly the verification of compliance should be carried out.

(44) Like in the existing international standards set by the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and the OECD framework, it forms part of the due diligence requirement to communicate externally relevant information on due diligence policies, processes and activities conducted to identify and address actual or potential adverse impacts, including the findings and outcomes of those activities. The proposal to amend Directive 2013/34/EU as regards corporate sustainability reporting sets out relevant reporting obligations for the companies covered by this directive. In order to avoid duplicating reporting obligations, this Directive should therefore not introduce any new reporting obligations in addition to those under Directive 2013/34/EU for the companies covered by that Directive as well as the reporting standards that should be developed under it. As regards companies that are within the scope of this Directive, but do not fall under Directive 2013/34/EU, in order to comply with their obligation of communicating as part of the due diligence under this Directive, they should publish on their website an annual statement in a language customary in the sphere of international business.

(47) Although SMEs are not included in the scope of this Directive, they could be impacted by its provisions as contractors or subcontractors to the companies which are in the scope. The aim is nevertheless to mitigate financial or administrative burden on SMEs, many of which are already struggling in the context of the global economic and sanitary crisis and to mitigate the financial or administrative burden on them. Member States should set up and operate, either individually or

Such support should also be made accessible, and where necessary adapted and extended to upstream economic operators in third countries. Companies whose business partner is an SME, are also encouraged to support them to comply with due diligence measures, in case such requirements would jeopardize the viability of the SME and use fair, reasonable, non-discriminatory and proportionate requirements vis-a-vis the SMEs.

Where the legal system of a Member State does not provide for administrative sanctions as foreseen in this Directive, the rules on administrative sanctions should be applied in such a way that the sanction is initiated by the competent supervisory authority and imposed by the judicial authority. Therefore, it is necessary that those Member States ensure that the application of the rules and sanctions has an equivalent effect to the administrative sanctions imposed by the competent supervisory authorities.

In order for such sanction regime to be effective, administrative sanctions to be imposed by the national supervisory authorities should include pecuniary sanctions. Such administrative fines should be comparable in magnitude to fines currently provided for in competition law and data protection law. OPINION OF THE COMMITTEE ON EMPLOYMENT AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

Rapporteur for opinion: Samira Rafaela

SHORT JUSTIFICATION

Responsible business conduct is an integral part of the European Union’s commitment to decent work worldwide. It is the illustration of how Europe’s social market company can renew existing economic governance practices in order to propel the just transition to sustainability, as well as uphold our commitments to human rights and dignity. The European Union will be the global frontrunner of corporate sustainability due diligence and through leading by example will inspire companies from third countries to match the ambitions set forward by this Directive. It is the Rapporteur’s strong conviction that due diligence policy will be impactful if it places the inviolable rights of people and their right to a clean environment ahead of outdated parasitic business interests.

The Rapporteur welcomes the proposal put forward by the European Commission, and with its amendments seeks to strengthen the proposal for the Directive by, amongst others, strongly integrating workers’ representatives and social partners, accounting for gender sensitivity and mainstreaming, broadening the scope, in order to target all high risk economic activities, and having a victim-based approach. Throughout the text, companies are regarded as partners. The Rapporteur emphasizes the importance of maintaining coherency with existing practices and norms, such as the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (UNGPs), ILO Tripartite Declaration of Principles Concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy, and the OECD Guidelines on Due Diligence.

The Rapporteur considers Europe’s SME’S as significant partners in unlocking the full potential of the Directive on Corporate Sustainability Due Diligence. European businesses, regardless of their size, will be indirectly affected by this Directive and they all deserve support in meeting its obligations. All companies play a crucial role in preventing, addressing, and remedying adverse human or environmental impacts. This is why the amendments proposed by the Rapporteur strengthen the capability of companies exercising due diligence, through the obligation of Member States to provide tailor-made templates, sector-specific guidelines, training and facilitating network and/or platform creation. Examples from the field have shown the efficiency and effectiveness of such due diligence support platforms in decreasing administrative burdens and harnessing the collective expertise of companies.
Furthermore, the scope has now been enlarged to include key high risk economic activities, such as financial enterprises, as recommended by the OECD Guidance for Responsible Business Conduct. It is irresponsible for the objectives of this Directive to exclude the sector which is integral for all the companies that will have to conduct due diligence. All business must be committed to responsible conduct.

The Rapporteur is convinced that this Directive will not be effective without the integration of a gender sensitive lens. The Directive as it was proposed did not sufficiently address the gendered dimension of responsible business conduct. The “gender-blind” approach will not effectively promote decent work in worldwide value chains. Specifically, the Rapporteur explicitly includes the Tourism and Hospitality sector for this reason, as women are overrepresented in this sector but are underrepresented at the higher levels of employment and management and as such may be positioned in a precarious position.

Finally, the Rapporteur sees meaningful engagement with potentially affected groups and persons as the centre of this Directive as evidenced by the amendments for the complaint procedure. These potentially affected groups include indigenous people, women, children, and human rights and environmental defenders. In the same vein, whistleblowers need to be protected as they may reveal adverse impacts that would have otherwise not been uncovered. The view of the Rapporteur is that meaningful engagement by companies, will be integral to this Directive’s impact and success.

AMENDMENTS

The Committee on Employment and Social Affairs calls on the Committee on Legal Affairs, as the committee responsible, to take into account the following amendments:

Amendment 1

Proposal for a directive

Recital 3

Text proposed by the Commission

(3) In its Communication on a Strong Social Europe for Just Transition\(^75\), the Commission committed to upgrading Europe’s social market economy to achieve a just transition to sustainability. This Directive will also contribute to the European Pillar of Social Rights, which promotes rights ensuring fair working conditions. It forms part of the EU policies and strategies relating to the promotion of decent work worldwide, including in global value chains, as referred to in the Commission Communication on decent work worldwide\(^76\).

Amendment

(3) In its Communication on a Strong Social Europe for Just Transition\(^75\), the Commission committed to upgrading Europe’s social market economy to achieve a just transition to sustainability. This Directive will also contribute to the European Pillar of Social Rights (the Pillar), which promotes rights ensuring decent living and fair working conditions. It will also create greater visibility for, and ownership of, the Pillar among companies, whose involvement is essential for effective implementation of the Pillar. It forms part of the EU policies and strategies relating to the promotion of decent work worldwide, including in global value chains, as referred to in the Commission Communication on fair and decent work worldwide. Decent working conditions include amongst others secure employment, working time, adequate wages, social dialogue, freedom of association, existence of work councils, collective bargaining, the information, consultation and participation rights of workers, work-life balance as well as health and safety.

75 Communication from the Commission to the European Parliament, the Council, the European Economic and Social Committee and the Committee of the Regions – A Strong Social Europe for Just Transitions (COM/2020/14 final).

76 Communication from the Commission to the European Parliament, the Council and the European Economic and Social Committee on decent work worldwide for a global just transition and a sustainable recovery, COM(2022) 66 final.

Amendment 2

Proposal for a directive
Recital 22 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment

(22a) In order to reflect the priority areas of international action aimed at tackling human rights, the selection of high-risk geographical areas for the purposes of this Directive should be based on the European External Action Service (EEAS) EU Annual Reports on Human Rights and Democracy and annually reassessed.

Amendment 3
Proposal for a directive
Recital 26 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(26a) In order to achieve an efficient implementation of this Directive, the Commission should introduce a toolbox to provide practical help to companies to comply with due diligence requirements, i.e. through contact points, sharing of best practices or standardized set of principles as a basis for a Code of Conduct.

Amendment 4
Proposal for a directive
Recital 32

Text proposed by the Commission

(32) In line with international standards, prevention and mitigation as well as bringing to an end and minimisation of adverse impacts should take into account the interests of those adversely impacted. In order to enable continuous engagement with the value chain business partner instead of termination of business relations (disengagement) and possibly exacerbating adverse impacts, this Directive should ensure that disengagement is a last-resort action, in line with the Union’s policy of zero-tolerance on child labour. Terminating a business relationship in which child labour was found could expose the child to even more severe adverse human rights impacts. This should therefore be taken into account when deciding on the appropriate action to take.

Amendment

(32) Where the company cannot prevent, mitigate, bring to an end or minimise all the identified actual and potential adverse impacts at the same time and to the full extent, it should be allowed to prioritise them based on the severity and likelihood of the adverse impact based on consultation with affected stakeholders and, where appropriate, with other relevant stakeholders. In line with the relevant international framework, the severity of an adverse impact should be assessed based on its gravity (scale of the adverse impact), its irreversibility, and difficulty to restore the situation prevailing prior to the impact (irremediable character of the adverse impact). The prioritisation strategy shall also ensure that all adverse impacts are addressed within reasonable time. In line with international standards, prevention and mitigation as well as bringing to an end and minimisation of adverse impacts should take into account the interests of those adversely impacted after a meaningful engagement with them. In order to enable continuous engagement with the value chain business partner instead of termination of business relations (disengagement) and possibly exacerbating adverse impacts, this Directive should ensure that disengagement is a last-resort action, including in line with the Union’s policy of zero-tolerance on child labour, Union’s Strategy on the rights of the Child and the target date of 2025 proclaimed by the United Nations for the full elimination of child labour worldwide. Terminating a business relationship in which child labour was found could expose the child to even more severe adverse human rights impacts. In the same line, women in precarious labour conditions could face more severe adverse human rights impacts thus increasing their vulnerability. This should therefore be taken into account when deciding on the appropriate action to take, while aiming to act in the best interest of the affected groups.

Amendment 5

Proposal for a directive
Recital 42

Text proposed by the Commission

(42) Companies should provide the possibility for persons and organisations to submit complaints directly to them in case of legitimate concerns regarding actual or potential human rights and environmental adverse impacts. Organisations who could submit such complaints should include trade unions and other workers’ representatives representing individuals working in the value chain concerned and civil society organisations active in the areas related to the value chain concerned where they have knowledge about a potential or actual adverse impact. Companies should establish a procedure

Amendment

(42) Companies should provide the possibility for persons and organisations to submit complaints directly to them in case of legitimate concerns regarding actual or potential human rights and environmental adverse impacts. Special attention should be given to ensuring the accessibility of that complaint mechanism and to the protection of the complainant, in particular women, vulnerable persons, people with disabilities and minors. While exercising this right, workers and their representatives should also be properly protected. Organisations who could submit such complaints should include trade for dealing with those complaints and inform workers, trade unions and other workers’ representatives, where relevant, about such processes. Recourse to the complaints and remediation mechanism should not prevent the complainant from having recourse to judicial remedies. In accordance with international standards, complaints should be entitled to request from the company appropriate follow-up on the complaint and to meet with the company’s representatives at an appropriate level to discuss potential or actual severe adverse impacts that are the subject matter of the complaint. This access should not lead to unreasonable solicitations of companies.

unions and worker's representatives, who represent individuals working in the value chain concerned, civil society organisations, human rights and environmental right defenders active in the areas related to the value chain concerned where they have substantiated knowledge about a potential or actual adverse impact. Member States should provide a framework, in accordance with their national labour law and practices, to companies on the procedure they should establish for dealing with those complaints. Companies should inform workers, trade unions and other workers representatives, where relevant, about such processes and related measures. Recourse to the complaints and remediation mechanism should not prevent the complainant from having recourse to effective judicial remedies. In accordance with international standards, complainants should be entitled to request from the company appropriate follow-up in written form and, if requested by the complainant, through adequate means of communication, on the complaint. The follow-up should be facts-based and provide supporting evidence for the explanation. Complainants should have the right to meet with a company’s representative at an appropriate level to discuss potential or actual adverse impacts that are the subject matter of the complaint. This access should not lead to unreasonable solicitations of companies, once the follow-up has been provided by the company. Companies may collaborate with business partners and entities, including through relevant industry and multi-stakeholder initiatives, when addressing complaints where the respective complainants and complaints are identical, such as through information-sharing, joint investigations or joint monitoring exercises.

Amendment 6
Proposal for a directive
Recital 48

Text proposed by the Commission

(48) In order to complement Member State support to SMEs, the Commission may build on existing EU tools, projects and other actions helping with the due diligence implementation in the EU and in third countries. It may set up new support measures that provide help to companies, including SMEs on due diligence requirements, including an observatory for value chain transparency and the facilitation of joint stakeholder initiatives.

Amendment

(48) In order to complement Member State support to SMEs, the Commission may build on existing EU tools, projects and other actions helping with the due diligence implementation in the EU and in third countries. It may set up new support measures that provide help to companies, including SMEs on due diligence requirements, including an observatory for value chain transparency and the facilitation of joint stakeholder initiatives. The Commission could also share and highlight national practices put in place by professional organisations, which enable VSEs/SMEs to respond effectively to governance requirements in a way that is tailored to their capacities and specificities.

Amendment 7

Proposal for a directive
Recital 64 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(64a) The obligations for companies set out in this Directive, regarding actual and potential human rights adverse impacts and environmental adverse impacts, should not have a negative impact on those very rights, including the right to freedom of association, assembly, the rights to organize and collective bargaining. This Directive should not apply when certain companies (insurance undertaking as defined in Article 13, point (1), of Directive 2009/138/EC and institution for occupational retirement provision as defined in Article 1, point (6) of Directive 2016/2341) enter, for the purpose of providing occupational pensions, into a relationship with a legal entity that is required take out occupational pension provisions for its employees. Excluding these specific relationships will ensure that companies in their provision of occupational pensions and legal entities acting as employers always can fulfil their obligations, including those following from collective agreements, to provide workers with their occupational pensions.

Amendment 1

Proposal for a directive
Recital 1

Text proposed by the Commission

(1) The Union is founded on the respect for human dignity, freedom, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights as enshrined in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. Those core values that have inspired the Union’s own creation, as well as the universality and indivisibility of human rights, and respect for the principles of the United Nations Charter and international law, should guide the Union’s action on the international scene. Such action includes fostering the sustainable economic, social and environmental development of developing countries.

Amendment

(1) The Union is founded on the respect for human dignity, freedom, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights as enshrined in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. Article 191 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU) states that Union policy should contribute to preserving, protecting and improving the quality of the environment, protecting human health, prudent and rational utilisation of natural resources and promoting measures at international level to deal with regional or world wide environmental problems, and in particular combating climate change. Those core values that have inspired the Union’s own creation, as well as the universality and indivisibility of human and environmental rights, and respect for the principles of the United Nations Charter and international law, should guide the Union’s action on the international scene. Such action includes, inter alia, fostering the sustainable economic, social and environmental development of developing countries.

Amendment

(4) The behaviour of companies across all sectors of the economy is key to success in the Union’s sustainability objectives as Union companies, especially large ones, rely on global value chains. It is also in the interest of companies to protect human rights, and the environment and climate, in given the rising concern of consumers and investors regarding these topics. Several initiatives fostering enterprises which support value-oriented transformation already exist on Union\textsuperscript{77}, as well as national\textsuperscript{78} level.

\textbf{(8a)} International agreements under the United Nations Convention on Biological Diversity, to which the Union and the Member States are parties, such as the recent “Kunming-Montreal Global Biodiversity Framework” (GBF), set out precise goals and targets to address the global biodiversity collapse, including restoration, conservation, halting species extinction, reducing risks associated with pesticides and environmentally harmful subsidies. The role of the private sector, in particular its investment strategies, is considered central to achieve these objectives.

Amendment 5

Proposal for a directive
Recital 9
(9) In the European Climate Law\textsuperscript{86}, the Union also legally committed to becoming climate-neutral by 2050 and to reducing emissions by at least 55\% by 2030. Both these commitments require changing the way in which companies produce and procure. The Commission’s 2030 Climate Target Plan\textsuperscript{87} models various degrees of emission reductions required from different economic sectors, though all need to see considerable reductions under all scenarios for the Union to meet its climate objectives. The Plan also underlines that “changes in corporate governance rules and practices, including on sustainable finance, will make company owners and managers prioritise sustainability objectives in their actions and strategies.” The 2019 Communication on the European Green Deal\textsuperscript{88} sets out that all Union actions and policies should pull together to help the Union achieve a successful and just transition towards a sustainable future. It also sets out that sustainability should be further embedded into the corporate governance framework.

(21) Under this Directive, EU companies with more than 500 employees on average and a worldwide net turnover exceeding EUR 150 million in the financial year preceding the last financial year should be required to comply with due diligence. As regards companies which do not fulfil those criteria, but which had more than 250 employees on average and more than EUR 40 million worldwide net turnover in the financial year preceding the last financial year and which operate in one or more high-impact sectors, due diligence should apply 2 years after the end of the transposition period of this directive, in order to provide for a longer adaptation period. In order to ensure a proportionate burden, companies operating in such high-impact sectors should be required to comply with more targeted due diligence focusing on severe adverse impacts. Temporary agency workers, including those posted under Article 1(3), point (c), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council, should be included in the calculation of the number of employees in the user company. Posted workers under Article 1(3), points (a) and (b), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU, should only be included in the calculation of the number of employees of the sending company.

(22a) This Directive acknowledges the 'One Health' approach as an integrated and unifying approach that aims to sustainably balance and optimize the health of people, animals and ecosystems. The 'One Health' approach recognises that the health of humans, domestic and wild animals, plants, and the wider environment, including ecosystems, are closely interlinked and inter-dependent. Therefore, this Directive takes into account the key role of the health sector in climate adaptation, and commits to making our health systems environmentally sustainable, climate-neutral and resilient at the latest by 2050. Companies in the relevant sectors should strive to ensure that the five freedoms for animal welfare are respected. (24a) Companies that are part of a group, including subsidies and parent companies, may not always have the same value chain. However, it may be that due diligence processes and actions are conducted at the level of the group. (25) In order to achieve a meaningful contribution to the sustainability transition, due diligence under this Directive should be carried out with respect to adverse human rights impact on protected persons resulting from the violation of one of the rights and prohibitions as enshrined in the international conventions as listed in the Annex to this Directive. In order to ensure a comprehensive coverage of human rights, a violation of a prohibition or right not specifically listed in that Annex which directly impairs a legal interest protected in those conventions should also form part of the adverse human rights impact covered by this Directive, provided that the company concerned could have reasonably established the risk of such impairment and any appropriate measures to be taken in order to comply with the due diligence obligations under this Directive, taking into account all relevant circumstances of their operations, such as the sector and operational context. Due diligence should further encompass adverse environmental impacts resulting from the violation of one of the prohibitions and obligations pursuant to the international environmental conventions listed in the Annex to this Directive.

(27) In order to conduct appropriate human rights, and environmental due diligence with respect to their operations, their subsidiaries, and their value chains, companies covered by this Directive should integrate due diligence into corporate policies, identify, prevent and mitigate as well as bring to an end and minimise the extent of potential and actual adverse human rights and environmental impacts, establish and maintain a complaints procedure, monitor the effectiveness of the taken measures in accordance with the requirements that are set up in this Directive and communicate publicly on their due diligence. In order to ensure clarity for companies, in particular the steps of preventing and mitigating potential adverse impacts and of bringing to an end, or when this is not possible, minimising actual adverse impacts should be clearly distinguished in this Directive.

Recital 29 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(29a) Due diligence obligations should be recognised as an ongoing and dynamic process instead of a ‘box-ticking exercise’ and due diligence strategies should therefore be in line with the dynamic nature of adverse impacts. Those strategies should cover every actual or potential adverse impact on human rights, the environment, including climate or good governance, although the severity and likelihood of the adverse impact, the company's ability to address the adverse impact, and the company's direct contribution to the cause of the adverse impact should be considered in the context of a prioritisation policy, where it is not feasible to prevent, neutralise or correct all identified adverse impacts at the same time.

Amendment 16

Recital 30

Text proposed by the Commission

(30) Under the due diligence obligations set out by this Directive, a company should identify actual or potential adverse human rights and environmental impacts. In order to allow for a comprehensive identification of adverse impacts, such identification should be based on quantitative and qualitative information. For instance, as regards adverse environmental impacts, the company should obtain information about baseline conditions at higher risk sites or facilities in value chains. Identification of adverse impacts should include assessing the human rights, and environmental context in a dynamic way and in regular intervals: prior to a new activity or relationship, prior to major decisions or changes in the operation; in response to or anticipation of changes in the operating environment; and periodically, at least every 12 months, throughout the life of an activity or relationship. Regulated financial undertakings providing loan, credit, or other financial services should identify the adverse impacts only at the inception of the contract. When identifying adverse impacts, companies should also identify and assess the impact of a business relationship’s business model and strategies, including trading, procurement and pricing practices. Where the company cannot prevent, bring to an end or minimize all its adverse impacts at the same time, it should be able to prioritize its action, provided it takes the measures reasonably available to the company, taking into account the specific circumstances.

(71) The objective of this Directive, namely better exploiting the potential of the single market to contribute to the transition to a sustainable economy and contributing to sustainable development through the prevention and mitigation of potential or actual human rights and environmental adverse impacts in companies’ value chains, cannot be sufficiently achieved by the Member States acting individually or in an uncoordinated manner, but can rather, by reason of the scale and effects of the actions, be better achieved at Union level. In particular, addressed problems and their causes are of a transnational dimension, as many companies are operating Union wide or globally and value chains expand to other Member States and to third countries. Moreover, individual Member States’ measures risk being ineffective and lead to fragmentation of the internal market. Therefore, the Union may adopt measures, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity as set out in Article 5 TEU. In accordance with the principle of proportionality, as set out in that Article, this Directive does not go beyond what is necessary in order to achieve that objective.

OPINION OF THE COMMITTEE ON DEVELOPMENT

for the Committee on Legal Affairs

Rapporteur for opinion: Pierfrancesco Majorino

SHORT JUSTIFICATION

The way in which companies operate in developing countries is a key factor for respect for human rights, the environment and the rule of law and good governance systems of these countries and towards the achievement of their sustainable development goals in line with United Nations Agenda 2030. Therefore, it is important to ensure that companies behave responsibly, avoid harm and contribute to the economic, social and environmental development of developing countries.

This Directive represents a very important step forward in this line. The Rapporteur welcomes the proposal, however believes that significant improvements are needed to ensure a responsible behaviour of companies in developing countries.

A holistic approach needs to be ensured by means of strengthening the respect for the rule of law and good governance systems in the countries, regions or territories where the company operates. Business success depends very much on the sustainability of the societies where they operate and business could play an important role in advancing the rule of law and good governance. In this sense companies should refrain from corruption and other bad practices that could undermine the weak institutional and legal frameworks existing in many developing countries and support existing structures, complying with laws and regulations throughout the company’s operations and value chain including tax laws and policies, honouring contractual obligations and commercial agreements and the dispute resolution procedures and decisions at all levels.

The scope should be expanded to include as many companies as possible and some key sectors should be added such as oil and gas productions and oil refining sector or constructions, logistics and infrastructures. Definitions have to be strengthened in order to include the adverse rule of law and good governance impacts, to provide some guidance on adverse environmental impacts as well as to reinforce the stakeholder definition, including by adding a new category of vulnerable stakeholders.

Given the crucial role that stakeholders are called to play throughout the whole process of due diligence a new article is proposed in order to define their meaningful involvement in the process as well as improvements in other legal provisions.

Some amendments have been introduced in order to ensure that companies map their value... chain and publicly disclose relevant information, that any decision to suspend or terminate a business is done with the meaningful engagement of relevant stakeholders and that it addresses the adverse impacts that it might cause.

In accordance with international standards, non-judicial remedies represent useful mechanisms to provide remedies and compensation to victims or people with legitimate interest or contribute to repair the damaged cause. However, to ensure that they can fulfil their objectives, they must comply with a series of requirements as set out in the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights.

Notwithstanding reporting requirements under Directive 2013/34, Member States should ensure that companies report on matters covered by this Directive as well as related information key to support companies and its subsidiaries and business partners operating in developing countries to identify, prevent and effectively address actual or potential adverse impacts.

The Rapporteur has also suggested some guidelines the Commission should provide in order to support companies and Member States authorities on how companies should fulfil their due diligence obligations, such as on impacts on rule of law and good governance, on the implementation of enhanced due diligence in conflict affected areas, on safety, effective and meaningful engagement with stakeholders in all due diligence processes or regarding the mapping of companies value chain and efficient process to monitor business partners behaviour through the value chain.

The accompanying measures have also been reinforced to take into account the need to step up the support to be provided in developing countries to build an enabling environment and protecting civic space, to raise awareness and capacity building for communities and stakeholders, including trade unions, NGOs or local associations, to monitor companies behaviour and impacts or to support access to justice for victims and persons and groups with legitimate interest.

Finally, it is essential to reinforce the civil liability ensuring that Member States take the necessary measures to make access to justice a reality, including by addressing the existing barriers to it and reversing the burden of proof towards companies.

AMENDMENTS

The Committee on Development calls on the Committee on Legal Affairs, as the committee responsible, to take into account the following amendments:

Amendment 1

Proposal for a directive

Recital 1
The Union is founded on the respect for human dignity, freedom, democracy, equality, the rule of law and respect for human rights as enshrined in the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. Those core values that have inspired the Union’s own creation, as well as the universality and indivisibility of human rights, and respect for the principles of the United Nations Charter and international law, should guide the Union’s action on the international scene. Such action includes fostering the sustainable economic, social and environmental development of developing countries.

Furthermore, Article 208 TFEU states the Union is to take into account the objectives of development cooperation in the policies that it implements which are likely to affect developing countries.

To achieve those objectives, a systemic change to the Union economy is needed to ensure that the green transition is achieved in a just and inclusive way, within planetary boundaries. Achievement of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) by the Union and its support for third countries to do the same will be essential if the Union is to demonstrate global leadership in achieving sustainability transitions.

Amendment 3
Proposal for a directive
Recital 4

Text proposed by the Commission

(4) The behaviour of companies across all sectors of the economy is key to success in the Union’s sustainability objectives as Union companies, especially large ones, rely on global value chains. It is also in the interest of companies to protect human rights and the environment, in particular given the rising concern of consumers and investors regarding these topics. Several initiatives fostering enterprises which support value-oriented transformation already exist on Union77, as well as national78 level.

Amendment

(6) The concept of human rights due diligence was specified and further developed in the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises80 which extended the application of due diligence to environmental and governance topics. The OECD Guidance on Responsible Business Conduct and sectoral guidance\textsuperscript{81} are internationally recognised frameworks setting out practical due diligence steps to help companies identify, prevent, mitigate and account for how they address actual and potential impacts in their operations, value chains and other business relationships. The concept of due diligence is also embedded in the recommendations of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy.\textsuperscript{82}

\textbf{Proposal for a directive}

\textbf{Recital 7}
(7) The United Nations’ Sustainable Development Goals\(^8^3\), adopted by all United Nations Member States in 2015, include the objectives to promote sustained, inclusive and sustainable economic growth. The Union has set itself the objective to deliver on the UN Sustainable Development Goals. The private sector contributes to those aims.

Amendment 6

Proposal for a directive
Recital 10 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(10a) Due diligence practices under this Directive should contribute to preserving and restoring marine and terrestrial biodiversity by, inter alia, halting, mitigating and reversing biodiversity loss and improving the state of ecosystems and their functions and the services they provide, and by improving the state of the environment, in particular air, water and soil, as part of the main objectives of protecting the health and well-being of people, animals and ecosystems from environment-related risks, in line with Agenda 2030.

Amendment

(10a) Due diligence practices under this Directive should effectively contribute to preserving and restoring marine and terrestrial biodiversity by, inter alia, halting, mitigating and reversing biodiversity loss and improving the state of ecosystems and their functions and the services they provide, and by improving the state of the environment, in particular air, water and soil, as part of the main objectives of protecting the health and well-being of people, animals and ecosystems from environment-related risks, in line with Agenda 2030.

\(^8^3\) https://www.un.org/ga/search/view_doc.asp?symbol=A/RES/70/1&Lang=E.

Amendment 7

Proposal for a directive
Recital 11 a (new)
The identification, prevention and mitigation of negative environmental impacts is a key aspect of this Directive. In that sense, the concept of environmental impact covers the overall possible harms to the climate or environment resulting from the violation of international commitments and Union legislation and it also includes impacts on air quality and air pollution; on water pollution or contamination and access to and availability of water resources; on pollution, contamination, erosion and use of land; on biodiversity including damage to wildlife, seabed and the marine environment, flora, fauna, natural habitats and ecosystems; on human health according to the 'One Health' approach; on climate, including through greenhouse gas emissions and the destruction or degradation of sinks; and on the transition to the circular economy, including through damage to reusability and recyclability, such as contamination of waste streams with hazardous substances.

Along with respect for human rights, the environment and the rule of law, the due diligence process should also include good governance. Good governance refers to rules, processes, and behaviour by which interests are articulated, resources are managed, and power is exercised in society. It includes the process whereby public institutions conduct public affairs and manage public resources in a manner that promotes the rule of law and the realisation of human rights, including civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights). Core elements of good governance are transparency, integrity, lawfulness, sound policy, participation, accountability, responsiveness, and the absence of corruption and wrong doing. Good governance has to be considered as key to achieving sustainable development and human well-being. This is, in particular, related to the control of corruption, which has been demonstrated to affect well-being both directly and indirectly.

Amendment 9

Proposal for a directive

Recital 13 b (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(13b) It is fundamental to ensure that human rights due diligence is implemented in a gender-responsive manner acknowledging that gender inequality is embedded both in state and market institutions and represents a constraint in the realisation of women’s and girl’s rights. Human rights violations are not gender neutral and should not be treated as such. Women are often disproportionately affected by adverse business practices, which requires a due diligence process that responds to their specific needs. Member States should ensure that companies apply gender lens throughout all the steps and activities of the due diligence process and actively support gender equality. Companies should work with suppliers to set up a social auditing system in a gender-sensitive way. Furthermore, Member States should ensure that gender-responsive remediation processes and mechanisms are to be designed to ensure equal access and equal outcomes for all genders. To achieve that, corporate grievance mechanisms should be accessible efficient, safe and fair to women, taking account of barriers women are more likely to face.

Amendment 10
Proposal for a directive
Recital 14

Text proposed by the Commission

(14) This Directive aims to ensure that companies active in the internal market contribute to sustainable development and the sustainability transition of economies and societies through the identification, prevention and mitigation, bringing to an end and minimisation of potential or actual adverse human rights and environmental impacts connected with companies’ own operations, subsidiaries and value chains.

Amendment

(14) This Directive aims to ensure that companies active in the internal market contribute to sustainable development and the sustainability transition of economies and societies in which they operate, including outside the Union market through the identification, prevention and mitigation, bringing to an end and minimisation of potential or actual adverse human rights, adverse labour rights, environmental, rule of law and good governance impacts connected with companies’ own operations, subsidiaries and value chains particularly in developing countries.

Amendment 11
Proposal for a directive
Recital 14 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(14a) This Directive should ensure that companies carry out due diligence applying a risk based approach, in line with international standards, to ensure that they comply with requirements set out in this Directive. That means that this Directive should set a base set of requirements for companies from all sectors to carry out due diligence covering their value chains broadly in order to identify where the severe impacts are most likely to occur and to prioritise how to mitigate and address those risks once identified.

Amendment 12

Proposal for a directive
Recital 15

Text proposed by the Commission

(15) Companies should take appropriate steps to set up and carry out due diligence measures, with respect to their own operations, their subsidiaries, as well as their established direct and indirect business relationships throughout their value chains in accordance with the provisions of this Directive. This Directive should not require companies to guarantee, in all circumstances, that adverse impacts will never occur or that they will be stopped. For example with respect to business relationships where the adverse impact results from State intervention, the company might not be in a position to arrive at such results. Therefore, the main obligations in this Directive should be ‘obligations of means’. The company should take the appropriate measures which can reasonably be expected to result in prevention or minimisation of the adverse impact under the circumstances of the specific case. Account should be taken of the specificities of the company’s value chain, sector or geographical area in which its value chain partners operate, the company’s power to influence its direct and indirect business relationships, and whether the company could increase its power of influence.

Amendment

(15) Companies should take appropriate steps to set up and carry out due diligence measures, with respect to their own operations, their subsidiaries, as well as their business relationships throughout their value chains in accordance with the provisions of this Directive. When companies are not in a position to avoid adverse impacts from the value chains, they should be required to terminate the harmful business relationships and to modify the structure of their value chains in order to ensure that that no longer contributes to or can be a cause of the adverse impact. The company should take the appropriate measures, which can reasonably be expected to result in prevention or minimisation of the adverse impact under the circumstances of the specific case. Account should be taken of the specificities of the company’s value chain, sector or geographical area in which its value chain partners operate, the company’s power to influence its business relationships, and whether the company could increase its power of influence.

(16a) Companies should develop and adapt the due diligence measures in light of the political context in which those companies, their subsidiaries and their business relationships operate throughout their value chains. In conflict-affected and high-risk areas, companies run additional risk of being involved in severe human rights abuses. In those areas, companies should therefore undertake heightened, conflict-sensitive due diligence, in order to address those heightened risks and to ensure that they do not facilitate, finance, exacerbate or otherwise negatively impact the conflict or contribute to violations of international human rights law or international humanitarian law in conflict-affected or high-risk areas.

It should encompass upstream established direct and indirect business relationships that design, extract, manufacture, transport, store and supply raw material, products, parts of products, or provide services to the company that are necessary to carry out the company’s activities, and also downstream relationships, including established direct and indirect business relationships, that use or receive products, parts of products or services from the company up to the end of life of the product, including inter alia the distribution of the product to retailers, the transport and storage of the product, dismantling of the product, its recycling, composting or landfilling.

(22) In order to reflect the priority areas of international action aimed at tackling human rights and environmental issues, the selection of high-impact sectors for the purposes of this Directive should be based on existing sectoral OECD due diligence guidance. The following sectors should be regarded as high-impact for the purposes of this Directive: the manufacture of textiles, leather and related products (including footwear), and the wholesale trade of textiles, clothing and footwear; agriculture, forestry, fisheries (including aquaculture), the manufacture of food products, and the wholesale trade of agricultural raw materials, live animals, wood, food, and beverages; the extraction of mineral resources regardless of where they are extracted from (including crude petroleum, natural gas, coal, lignite, metals and metal ores, as well as all other, non-metallic minerals and quarry products), the manufacture of basic metal products, other non-metallic mineral products and fabricated metal products (except machinery and equipment), and the wholesale trade of mineral resources, basic and intermediate mineral products (including metals and metal ores, mineral fuels, coal, lignite, and raw materials).

Amendment

(22) In order to reflect the priority areas of international action aimed at tackling human and labour rights, environmental, rule of law and good governance issues, this Directive should provide a list of high-impact sectors based, among others, on existing sectoral OECD due diligence guidance. The sectors that should be regarded as high-impact for the purposes of this Directive include: the energy sector including oil, gas, nuclear, steam, electricity and other sources throughout their life cycle, from extraction, refining, production, combustion of fuels, in transportation, storage and waste management including radioactive waste; the chemicals sector; manufacture of textiles, apparel, fur, leather and related products (including footwear), the wholesale trade and retail of textiles, clothing and footwear; plastic production, waste shipment and management; agriculture, forestry, fisheries (including aquaculture), the management of land and resources (including in relation to nature conservation or other related activities); the manufacture of food products, and the wholesale trade of agricultural raw materials, live animals, animal products, construction materials, fuels, chemicals and other intermediate products). As regards the financial sector, due to its specificities, in particular as regards the value chain and the services offered, even if it is covered by sector-specific OECD guidance, it should not form part of the high-impact sectors covered by this Directive. At the same time, in this sector, the broader coverage of actual and potential adverse impacts should be ensured by also including very large companies in the scope that are regulated financial undertakings, even if they do not have a legal form with limited liability.

More specifically, the Directive should apply to third-country companies which generated a net turnover of at least EUR 40 million in the Union in the financial year preceding the last financial year or a net turnover of more than EUR 8 million but less than EUR 40 million in the financial year preceding the last financial year in one or more of the high-impact sectors, as of 2 years after the end of the transposition period of this Directive. Business enterprises could have various structures resulting in a single company having a net turnover below the threshold. As mentioned in the Interpretative Guide to the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, companies could operate inter alia through various subsidiaries or follow a franchise model. connection between the third-country companies and the Union territory. Turnover is a proxy for the effects that the activities of those companies could have on the internal market. In accordance with international law, such effects justify the application of Union law to third-country companies. To ensure identification of the relevant turnover of companies concerned, the methods for calculating net turnover for non-EU companies as laid down in Directive (EU) 2013/34 as amended by Directive (EU) 2021/2101 should be used. To ensure effective enforcement of this Directive, an employee threshold should, in turn, not be applied to determine which third-country companies fall under this Directive, as the notion of “employees” retained for the purposes of this Directive is based on Union law and could not be easily transposed outside of the Union. In the absence of a clear and consistent methodology, including in accounting frameworks, to determine the employees of third-country companies, such employee threshold would therefore create legal uncertainty and would be difficult to apply for supervisory authorities. The definition of turnover should be based on Directive 2013/34/EU which has already established the methods for calculating net turnover for non-Union companies, as turnover and revenue definitions are similar in international accounting frameworks too. With a view to ensuring that the supervisory authority knows which third-country companies generate the required turnover in the Union to fall under the scope of this Directive, this Directive should require that a supervisory authority in the Member State where the third-country company’s authorised representative is domiciled or established and, where it is different, a supervisory authority in the Member State in which the company generated most of its net turnover in the Union in the financial year preceding the last financial year are informed that the company is a company falling under the connection between the third-country companies and the Union territory. (25a) Companies’ behaviour could have negative impact on rule of law and good governance systems, in particular in developing countries. They could take advantage of the existing weaknesses in the institutional and legal systems to do business by violating existing international or regional legal frameworks, in particular when rules are not respected, including the non-payment of their taxes, when their democratic, legislative executive, administrative or judicial processes are influenced using corrupted practices, violence or intimidation or when companies are directly or indirectly involved in criminal activities with the serious consequences that that entails for those countries and their communities. Corruption and insufficient rule of law greatly undermine respect for human rights and the Environment. Corruption enables companies to avoid responsibility for their impact on human rights and the environment, endangers human rights and environmental and rule of law and good governance defenders, weakens the quality, frequency and trust for enforcement activities of public authorities (e.g. labour inspection and environmental authorities) and for judicial proceedings.

However, the Directive should also, for cases where potential adverse impacts could not be addressed by the described prevention or mitigation measures, refer to the obligation for companies to refrain from entering into new or extending existing relations with the partner in question and to either temporarily suspend commercial relationships with the partner in question, while pursuing prevention, and minimisation and remediation efforts where appropriate, if there is reasonable expectation that these efforts are to succeed in the short-term; or to terminate the business relationship with respect to the activities concerned if the potential adverse impact is severe. In order to allow companies to fulfil that obligation, Member States should provide for the availability of an option to terminate the business relationship in contracts governed by their laws. It is possible that prevention of adverse impacts at the level of indirect business relationships requires collaboration with another company, for example a company which has a direct contractual relationship with the supplier. In some instances, such collaboration could be the only realistic way of preventing adverse impacts, in particular, where the indirect business relationship is not ready to enter into a contract with the company. In these instances, the company should collaborate with the entity which can most effectively prevent or mitigate adverse impacts at the level of the indirect business relationship while respecting competition law.

(37) As regards direct and indirect business relationships, industry cooperation, industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives can help create additional leverage to identify, mitigate, and prevent adverse impacts. Therefore it should be possible for companies to rely on such initiatives to support the implementation of their due diligence obligations laid down in this Directive to the extent that such schemes and initiatives are appropriate to support the fulfilment of those obligations. Companies could assess, at their own initiative, the alignment of these schemes and initiatives with the obligations under this Directive. In order to ensure full information on such initiatives, the Directive should also refer to the possibility for the Commission and the Member States to facilitate the dissemination of information on such schemes or initiatives and their outcomes. The Commission, in collaboration with Member States, may issue guidance for assessing the fitness of industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives.

In line with the UNGPs and OECD Guidelines, companies should engage with potentially affected stakeholders, with the objective of understanding and responding to their interests and concerns. They should particularly engage with those who are likely to be the most vulnerable to adverse impacts in connection with the company's operations or value chain, such as smallholders, farm workers, indigenous peoples and local communities, and women. The right to the free, prior, and informed consent of indigenous peoples and local communities should also be fully embedded in relevant engagement and consultation processes, in line with the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UNDRIP) and ILO Convention on Indigenous and Tribal Peoples. The engagement process should include the explicit recognition of the role of social dialogue and engagement with workers' representatives and trade unions, as described in the OECD Guidelines and International Labour Organisation (ILO) Tripartite

This could include working with partner country governments, the local private sector and stakeholders on addressing the root causes of adverse human rights, labour rights, environmental, rule of law and good governance impacts. In the same line, the Commission and Member States should provide targeted support to stakeholders, including civil society organisations and human rights, labour rights, environmental and rule of law and good governance defenders in developing countries, in order to ensure their meaningful and safe engagement in all due diligence processes. In particular, support should be provided to national and local civil society organisations to monitor corporate practices and hold companies accountable and dedicated measures and funds should ease access to justice. The Commission should also consider specific support programs for human rights, labour rights, environmental and rule of law and good governance defenders at risk because of their monitoring of corporate activities. The company should not be liable if it carried out specific due diligence measures. However, it should not be exonerated from liability through implementing such measures in case it was unreasonable to expect that the action actually taken, including as regards verifying compliance, would be adequate to prevent, mitigate, bring to an end or minimise the adverse impact. In addition, in the assessment of the existence and extent of liability, due account is to be taken of the company’s efforts, insofar as they relate directly to the damage in question, to comply with any remedial action required of them by a supervisory authority, any investments made and any targeted support provided as well as any collaboration with other entities to address adverse impacts in its value chains.

(58) The liability regime does not regulate who should prove that the company’s action was reasonably adequate under the circumstances of the case, therefore this question is left to national law.

Amendment

(58) The most significant barrier to access to justice for victims of adverse impacts is the difficulty in proving the company's failure to meet its obligations. Breaches of the obligations laid down in the Directive that have entailed damage for a person or a group of persons, can be extremely difficult to prove in court or before any other competent body by claimants, since many times this requires access to information that is only possessed by the company. Therefore, Member States shall take the necessary measures, in accordance with their national judicial systems, to ensure that, where persons who consider themselves wronged by failure to apply due diligence responsibilities establish, before a court or other competent body, facts from which it could be presumed that there has been a direct or indirect breach of the due diligence responsibilities, it shall be for the respondent to prove that the company’s action was adequate under the circumstances of the case, thus contributing to access to an effective remedy.

Member States should thus ensure that victims have access to an effective remedy and that the costs and the length of the proceedings do not prevent claimants from access to courts or to non-judicial bodies (or structures or mechanisms). These measures could for example, take the form of public funding, including structural support for victims of actual and potential adverse impacts, limitation of applicable court or administrative fees, or access to legal aid.

OPINION OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDUSTRY, RESEARCH AND ENERGY

for the Committee on Legal Affairs

Rapporteur for opinion: Martina Dlabajová

SHORT JUSTIFICATION

In general, the rapporteur supports the long-term aim presented in the Commission’s proposal that must be however aligned to current needs of businesses, especially SMEs and the “one in, one out” principle. There is a clear need to provide a harmonised legal framework and level playing field, if we want to improve trust in companies’ commitments for human rights’ enforcement and environmental protection while incentivising sustainable investment, however the legislative proposal should not create new unnecessary burdens, especially for SMEs in existing and future supply chains. On the other hand, there is a need to avoid distortive discrepancies emerging between Member States to improve predictability and certainty for the industry.

The rapporteur strongly supports the Commission’s proposal to keep SMEs and Microenterprises out of the proposed rules. The financial and administrative burden to set up and implement a due diligence process would be too high for small and family businesses that will be already indirectly affected by obligations stemming from large companies amongst their customers. Accordingly, the proposal’s requirements to assess potential adverse effects on them and to provide them with appropriate support are justified and needed. Only such an approach can achieve the goal of supporting SMEs not only from the Member States and the EU, but also from companies within supply chains outside the EU.

The rapporteur is nonetheless of the opinion that the introduction of the proposed rules along the value chain should be gradual and therefore suggest to focus on the supply chain instead of the whole value chain. The Commission’s proposal also contains numerous unclear legal concepts that are open to interpretation, and thus considers in contradiction to legal certainty and harmonisation intentions. Any obligation should only occur in the context of activity related to a company’s own operations or through a direct business relationship. The proposal would only cover companies contributing to the production of goods, including their development, or the provision of services, as "direct partners". The directive should not apply to downstream companies that only use or receive products up and/or take them to their end of life. This would represent excessive burden for those companies, who usually operate with many suppliers compared to upstream companies with a reduced number of suppliers. This change should also be reflected in the definition of established business relationship in order to provide legal certainty to companies and ensure that only direct relationship is concerned.

Finally, on liability, the rapporteur is of the opinion that it should be left to the Member States to align to already existing civil liability regime. Given the impact this could have on companies, some Member States exclude specific liability regime and favour an obligation of mean rather than an obligation of result. This possibility for Member States of using their own tests to consider accountability and appropriate remedy should remain.
AMENDMENTS

The Committee on Industry, Research and Energy calls on the Committee on Legal Affairs, as the committee responsible, to take into account the following amendments:

Amendment 1

Proposal for a directive
Recital 14

Text proposed by the Commission

(14) This Directive aims to ensure that companies active in the internal market contribute to sustainable development and the sustainability transition of economies and societies through the identification, prevention and mitigation, bringing to an end and minimisation of potential or actual adverse human rights and environmental impacts connected with companies’ own operations, subsidiaries and value chains.

Amendment

(14) This Directive aims to ensure that companies active in the internal market contribute to sustainable development and the sustainability transition of economies and societies through the identification, prevention and mitigation, bringing to an end and minimisation of potential or actual adverse human rights and environmental impacts connected with companies’ own operations, subsidiaries and supply chains.

Amendment 2

Proposal for a directive
Recital 14 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(14 a) In line with relevant Union and national law, all companies in the Union need to adhere to the protection of human rights and environmental standards. If that is not the case, Member States and their relevant authorities are required to enforce the legislation. Thus, there is no need for companies within the Union to control each other’s conduct. The goal of due diligence is to tackle risks in cases where human rights and environmental standards are not or cannot be enforced. Therefore, tracing activities in the upstream supply chain shall be focused on direct business relationships outside of the European Union.

Amendment

(14 a) In line with relevant Union and national law, all companies in the Union need to adhere to the protection of human rights and environmental standards. If that is not the case, Member States and their relevant authorities are required to enforce the legislation. Thus, there is no need for companies within the Union to control each other’s conduct. The goal of due diligence is to tackle risks in cases where human rights and environmental standards are not or cannot be enforced. Therefore, tracing activities in the upstream supply chain shall be focused on direct business relationships outside of the European Union.
(15) Companies should take appropriate steps within their means to set up and carry out risk based due diligence measures, with respect to their own operations, their subsidiaries, as well as their established direct and indirect business relationships with entities from third countries throughout their supply chains in accordance with the provisions of this Directive. This Directive should not require companies to guarantee, in all circumstances, that adverse impacts will never occur or that they will be stopped. For example with respect to business relationships where the adverse impact results from State intervention, the company might not be in a position to arrive at such results. Therefore, the main obligations in this Directive should be ‘obligations of means’. While companies can be asked to prevent or mitigate adverse impacts through due diligence policies, it is still in the responsibility of states to actually combat human rights violations worldwide. The company should take the appropriate measures which can reasonably be expected to result in prevention or minimisation of the adverse impact under the circumstances of the specific case. The measures taken should be proportionate and commensurate to the likelihood and severity of the company’s potential or actual adverse impacts and its specific circumstances, particularly its sector of activity, the size and length of its supply chain, the size of the company, its capacity, resources and leverage.
Proposal for a directive
Recital 17

Text proposed by the Commission

(17) Adverse human rights and environmental impact occur in companies’ own operations, subsidiaries, products, and in their value chains, in particular at the level of raw material sourcing, manufacturing, or at the level of product or waste disposal. In order for the due diligence to have a meaningful impact, it should cover human rights and environmental adverse impacts generated throughout the life-cycle of production and use and disposal of product or provision of services, at the level of own operations, subsidiaries and in value chains.

Amendment 5

Proposal for a directive
Recital 17 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(17 a) Companies should be allowed to set up a prioritisation strategy based on a risk assessment and a risk-based monitoring methodology for identifying potential adverse impacts. Companies should consider the level of severity, likelihood and urgency of the different adverse impacts, the nature and context of their operations, including geography, the scope of the risks, their scale and how irremediable they might be, and if necessary, use the prioritisation policy in dealing with them.

Amendment 6

Proposal for a directive
Recital 18
(18) The value chain should cover activities related to the production of a good or provision of services by a company, including the development of the product or the service and the use and disposal of the product as well as the related activities of established business relationships of the company. It should encompass upstream established direct and indirect business relationships that design, extract, manufacture, transport, store and supply raw material, products, parts of products, or provide services to the company that are necessary to carry out the company’s activities, and also downstream relationships, including established direct and indirect business relationships, that use or receive products, parts of products or services from the company up to the end of life of the product, including inter alia the distribution of the product to retailers, the transport and storage of the product, dismantling of the product, its recycling, composting or landfilling.

(18) The supply chain should cover activities directly necessary for the production of a good or provision of services by a company, including the development of the product or the service as well as the related activities of direct business relationships of the company. It should encompass upstream business relationships that design, extract, manufacture, transport, store and supply raw material, products, parts of products, or provide services to the company that are necessary to carry out the company’s activities.

Proposal for a directive

Recital 19

(19) As regards regulated financial undertakings providing loan, credit, or other financial services, “value chain” with respect to the provision of such services should be limited to the activities of the clients receiving such services, and the subsidiaries thereof whose activities are linked to the contract in question. Clients that are households and natural persons not acting in a professional or business capacity, as well as small and medium sized undertakings, should not be considered to be part of the value chain.

(19) As the financial services industry is already subject to several provisions and obligations under existing legislation such as the Sustainable Finance Disclosure Regulation (SFDR) or the Capital Requirements Directive (CRD), the risk of overlap, lack of clarity and undue burden is evident. Furthermore the risk of limited financing to the European economy should not be underestimated. A possible future inclusion should therefore be preceded by a proper impact assessment.
The activities of the companies or other legal entities that are included in the value chain of that client should not be covered.

Amendment 8

Proposal for a directive
Recital 20

Text proposed by the Commission

(20) In order to allow companies to properly identify the adverse impacts in their value chain and to make it possible for them to exercise appropriate leverage, the due diligence obligations should be limited in this Directive to established business relationships. For the purpose of this Directive, established business relationships should mean such direct and indirect business relationships which are, or which are expected to be lasting, in view of their intensity and duration and which do not represent a negligible or ancillary part of the value chain. The nature of business relationships as “established” should be reassessed periodically, and at least every 12 months. If the direct business relationship of a company is established, then all linked indirect business relationships should also be considered as established regarding that company.

Amendment

(20) In order to allow companies to properly identify and prioritise the adverse impacts in their supply chain based on a risk assessment and risk-based monitoring and to make it possible for them to exercise appropriate leverage, the due diligence obligations should be limited in this Directive to business relationships. For the purpose of this Directive, business relationships should mean a relationship with a business partner from a third country that are necessary for the supply of goods or the provision of services that are necessary for the production of the companies’ product or the provision of and use of the relevant service, with whom the company has a commercial agreement, and that does not represent a negligible or merely ancillary part of the supply chain.

Amendment 9

Proposal for a directive
Recital 20 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(20 a) In order to offset the regulatory burden for citizens, administrations and businesses introduced by this Directive, the Commission should review the Union regulatory framework in relevant policy area by applying the “one in, one out” principle as set out in the Commission communication of 29 April 2021 entitled “Better Regulation: Joining forces to make better laws”, and, where appropriate, present legislative proposals for the amendment or deletion of provisions in other Union legislative acts in the same policy area.

Amendment 10
Proposal for a directive
Recital 21

Text proposed by the Commission

(21) Under this Directive, EU companies with more than 500 employees on average and a worldwide net turnover exceeding EUR 150 million in the financial year preceding the last financial year should be required to comply with due diligence. As regards companies which do not fulfil those criteria, but which had more than 250 employees on average and more than EUR 40 million worldwide net turnover in the financial year preceding the last financial year and which operate in one or more high-impact sectors, due diligence should apply 2 years after the end of the transposition period of this directive, in order to provide for a longer adaptation period. In order to ensure a proportionate burden, companies operating in such high-impact sectors should be required to comply with more targeted due diligence focusing on severe adverse impacts. Temporary agency workers, including those posted under Article 1(3), point (c), of Directive 96/71/EC, as amended by Directive 2018/957/EU of the European Parliament and of the Council103, should be included in the calculation of the number of employees in the user company. (37) As regards direct and indirect business relationships, industry cooperation, industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives can help create additional leverage to identify, mitigate, and prevent adverse impacts. Therefore it should be possible for companies to rely on such initiatives to support the implementation of their due diligence obligations laid down in this Directive to the extent that such schemes and initiatives are appropriate to support the fulfilment of those obligations. Companies could assess, at their own initiative, the alignment of these schemes and initiatives with the obligations under this Directive. In order to ensure full information on such initiatives, the Directive should also refer to the possibility for the Commission and the Member States to facilitate the dissemination of information on such schemes or initiatives and their outcomes. The Commission, in collaboration with Member States, may issue guidance for assessing the fitness of industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives.

(46) In order to provide support and practical tools to companies or to Member State authorities on how companies should fulfil their due diligence obligations, the Commission, using relevant international guidelines and standards as a reference, and in consultation with Member States, the European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights, the European Environment Agency, the European Agency for Small and Medium enterprises, and where appropriate with international bodies having expertise in due diligence, should issue guidelines in digital, free of charge and easily accessible format, including for specific sectors or specific adverse impacts, an overview of applicable industry initiatives, and practical guidance on proportionality and prioritisation, in terms of impacts, sectors and geographical areas. Furthermore, the guidelines should include a list of areas, whether sectoral or geographic, such as regions and countries.
where adverse human rights impacts and/or environmental adverse impacts are unlikely or likely to occur. Companies should not be required to perform due diligence on parts of the supply chain linked to areas where adverse impacts are unlikely to occur. Countries or regions, where adverse impacts are unlikely to occur, could be the European Economic Area, the United States of America, the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and Japan. One criteria for this list could be a free-trade agreement between the European Union and the third country or region. The guidelines should be made available no later than 18 months after the date of entry into force of this Directive. The Commission should regularly review the relevance of its guidelines and adapt them to new best practices. Country factsheets should be updated regularly by the Commission and made publicly available in order to provide up-to-date information on the international Conventions and Treaties ratified by each of the Union’s trading partners. The Commission should collect and publish trade and customs data on origins of raw materials, and intermediate and finished products, and publish information on human rights, environmental and governance potential or actual adverse impacts risks associated with certain countries or regions, sectors and sub-sectors, and products.

Amendment

(47) Although SMEs are not included in the scope of this Directive, they could be impacted by its provisions as contractors or subcontractors to the companies which are in the scope. The aim is nevertheless to mitigate financial or administrative burden on SMEs, many of which are already struggling in the context of the global economic and sanitary crisis. In order to support SMEs, Member States should set up and operate, either individually or jointly, dedicated websites, portals or platforms, and Member States could also financially support SMEs and help them build capacity. Such support should also be made accessible, and where necessary adapted and extended to upstream economic operators in third countries. Companies whose business partner is an SME, are also encouraged to support them to comply with due diligence measures, in case such requirements would jeopardize the viability of the SME and use fair, reasonable, non-discriminatory and proportionate requirements vis-a-vis the SMEs.

1. 2 a. For the purpose of fulfilling these requirements, companies may map all areas of their own operations, those of their subsidiaries and, where related to their supply chains, those of their business partners. Based on the results of that mapping, companies may carry out an in-depth assessment of the areas where adverse impacts were identified to be most likely to be present or most significance.

Companies may identify actual and potential adverse impacts on the basis of a risk assessment and risk-based monitoring methodology, taking into account the likelihood, severity and urgency of adverse impacts, the nature and context of their operations, including sector and geographic location, the scope of the risks, their scale and how irremediable they might be.

OPINION OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE INTERNAL MARKET AND CONSUMER PROTECTION

for the Committee on Legal Affairs

Rapporteur for opinion: Deirdre Clune

PA_Legam

SHORT JUSTIFICATION

The proposal for a Directive on corporate sustainability due diligence aims to foster sustainable and responsible corporate behaviour throughout global value chains, which the Rapporteur fully supports. The proposal will require companies to identify and, where necessary, prevent, end or mitigate adverse impacts of their activities on human rights and on the environment. For businesses these new rules will bring legal certainty and a level playing field when compared to the existing situation where there a varying approaches taken in different Member States.

The draft opinion aims to increase the level of harmonisation of the Directive and avoid fragmentation, preserve a risk-based approach and streamline procedures and provide increased support to SME’s in order to help them comply with the requirements.

The Rapporteur broadly agrees with the objectives as proposed by the Commission however is concerned that while the proposed Directive takes a minimum harmonisation approach, it leaves room for Member States to impose diverging obligations from those in this Directive. The Rapporteur is concerned that this could lead to a divergence of rules at national level, with differing requirements in differing Member States that may actually undermine legal certainty and the creation of a level playing field for companies. To that end, the Rapporteur has proposed a series of amendments to increase the level of harmonisation and cross-border cooperation in the proposal. For example, companies must be able to demonstrate that they meet the requirements in a consolidated manner by being able to report at group level in a single Member State.

In order to better support SME’s in complying with the requirements stemming from this Directive, the Rapporteur has strengthened the provisions concerning support provided to SME’s in Articles 7 and 8. In addition, the Rapporteur has proposed that the Commission should issue guide guidelines to help companies, particularly SME’s to help fulfil their due diligence obligations which may be used as a basis for providing administrative or financial support to SME’s. Furthermore, the Rapporteur also proposes that each Member State establish a national single point of contact, that can guide and support companies while also serving in a liaison function to better ensure cross-border cooperation and avoid fragmentation.

Finally, the Rapporteur added some amendment aimed at further clarifying that a risk-based approach needs to be taken for effective due diligence and that this should be done via an established risk-based monitoring methodology to ensure that companies are effectively identifying risk in their value chain taking into account the nature and context of the operations of the company. This could include, for example, geographic considerations, the scope of the risks and their scale.

AMENDMENTS

The Committee on the Internal Market and Consumer Protection calls on the Committee on Legal Affairs, as the committee responsible, to take into account the following amendments:

Amendment 1
Proposal for a directive
Recital 15

Text proposed by the Commission
(15) Companies should take appropriate steps to set up and carry out due diligence measures, with respect to their own operations, their subsidiaries, as well as their established direct and indirect business relationships throughout their value chains in accordance with the provisions of this Directive. This Directive should not require companies to guarantee, in all circumstances, that adverse impacts will never occur or that they will be stopped. For example with respect to business relationships where the adverse impact results from State intervention, the company might not be in a position to arrive at such results. Therefore, the main obligations in this Directive should be ‘obligations of means’. The company should take the appropriate measures which can reasonably be expected to result in prevention or minimisation of the adverse impact under the circumstances of the specific case. Account should be taken of the specificities of the company’s value chain, sector or geographical area in which

Therefore, the main obligations in this Directive should be ‘obligations of means’. The company should take the appropriate measures which can reasonably be expected to result in prevention or minimisation of the adverse impact under the circumstances of the specific case. The action should be proportionate to the significance and scale of the adverse impact and to the contribution of the company’s conduct to its value chain partners operate, the company’s power to influence its direct and indirect business relationships, and whether the company could increase its power of influence.

Due diligence obligations provided for under this Directive should be underpinned by a risk-based approach which takes into account the severity, likelihood and urgency of potential and actual adverse impacts.

Amendment 2
Proposal for a directive
Recital 18

Text proposed by the Commission

(18) The value chain should cover activities related to the production of a good or provision of services by a company, including the development of the product or the service and the use and disposal of the product as well as the related activities of established business relationships of the company. It should encompass upstream established direct and indirect business relationships that design, extract, manufacture, transport, store and supply raw material, products, parts of products, or provide services to the company that are necessary to carry out the company’s activities, and also downstream relationships, including established direct and indirect business relationships, that use or receive products, parts of products or services from the company up to the end of life of the product, including inter alia the distribution of the product to retailers, the transport and storage of the product, dismantling of the product, its recycling, composting or landfilling.

Amendment 3
Proposal for a directive
Recital 20

Text proposed by the Commission

(20) In order to allow companies to properly identify the adverse impacts in their value chain and to make it possible for them to exercise appropriate leverage, the due diligence obligations should be limited in this Directive to established business relationships. For the purpose of this Directive, established business relationships should mean such direct and indirect business relationships which are, or which are expected to be lasting, in view of their intensity and duration and which do not represent a negligible or ancillary part of the value chain. The nature of business relationships as “established” should be reassessed periodically, and at least every 12 months. If the direct business relationship of a company is established, then all linked indirect business relationships should also be considered as established regarding that company.

Amendment 4
Proposal for a directive
Recital 27

Text proposed by the Commission

(27) In order to conduct appropriate human rights, and environmental due diligence with respect to their operations, their subsidiaries, and their value chains, companies covered by this Directive should integrate due diligence into corporate policies, identify, prevent and mitigate as well as bring to an end and minimise the extent of potential and actual adverse human rights and environmental impacts, establish and maintain a complaints procedure, monitor the effectiveness of the taken measures in

Amendment

(27) In order to conduct appropriate human rights, and environmental due diligence with respect to their operations, their subsidiaries, and their value chains, companies covered by this Directive should integrate due diligence into corporate policies, identify, prevent and mitigate as well as bring to an end and minimise the extent of potential and actual adverse human rights and environmental impacts, establish and maintain a complaints procedure, monitor the effectiveness of the taken measures in accordance with the requirements that are set up in this Directive and communicate publicly on their due diligence. In order to ensure clarity for companies, in particular the steps of preventing and mitigating potential adverse impacts and of bringing to an end, or when this is not possible, minimising actual adverse impacts should be clearly distinguished in this Directive.

Amendment 5
Proposal for a directive
Recital 27 a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(27a) This Directive is aimed at creating a level playing field and is intended to put an end to fragmentation in the internal market. It is crucial to the effectiveness of this Directive that uniform rules apply to businesses in the internal market. Therefore, Member States should not maintain or introduce, in their national law, provisions diverging from those laid down in this Directive.

Amendment 6
Proposal for a directive
Recital 29

Text proposed by the Commission

(29) To comply with due diligence obligations, companies need to take appropriate measures with respect to identification, prevention and bringing to an end adverse impacts. An ‘appropriate measure’ should mean a measure that is proportionate.
capable of achieving the objectives of due diligence, commensurate with the degree of severity and the likelihood of the adverse impact, and reasonably available to the company, taking into account the circumstances of the specific case, including characteristics of the economic sector and of the specific business relationship and the company’s influence thereof, and the need to ensure prioritisation of action. In this context, in line with international frameworks, the company’s influence over a business relationship should include, on the one hand its ability to persuade the business relationship to take action to bring to an end or prevent adverse impacts (for example through ownership or factual control, market power, pre-qualification requirements, linking business incentives to human rights and environmental performance, etc.) and, on the other hand, the degree of influence or leverage that the company could reasonably exercise, for example through cooperation with the business partner in question or engagement with another company which is the direct business partner of the business relationship associated with adverse impact.

Amendment 7
Proposal for a directive
Recital 30

Text proposed by the Commission

(30) Under the due diligence obligations
set out by this Directive, a company should identify actual or potential adverse human rights and environmental impacts. In order to allow for a comprehensive identification of adverse impacts, such identification should be based on quantitative and qualitative information. For instance, as

(30) Under the due diligence obligations
set out by this Directive, a company should identify actual or potential adverse human rights and environmental impacts, in accordance with a risk-based approach. In order to allow for a comprehensive identification of adverse impacts, such identification should be based on regards adverse environmental impacts, the company should obtain information about baseline conditions at higher risk sites or facilities in value chains. Identification of adverse impacts should include assessing the human rights, and environmental context in a dynamic way and in regular intervals: prior to a new activity or relationship, prior to major decisions or changes in the operation; in response to or anticipation of changes in the operating environment; and periodically, at least every 12 months, throughout the life of an activity or relationship. Regulated financial undertakings providing loan, credit, or other financial services should identify the adverse impacts only at the inception of the contract. When identifying adverse impacts, companies should also identify and assess the impact of a business relationship’s business model and strategies, including trading, procurement and pricing practices. Where the company cannot prevent, bring to an end or minimize all its adverse impacts at the same time, it should be able to prioritize its action, provided it takes the measures reasonably available to the company, taking into account the specific circumstances.

Amendment 8
Proposal for a directive
Recital 30a (new)

Text proposed by the Commission

(30a) The risk-based approach for due diligence should allow for a risk-based identification methodology that enables companies to take a proportionate approach to the identification of actual and potential adverse human rights and environmental impacts that takes into account the likelihood, severity and urgency of potential or actual adverse human rights impacts and environmental impacts as well as the nature and context of the operations of the company, including geographic considerations, the extent and type of the risks relating to such potential or adverse impacts and their scale.

Amendment 9
Proposal for a directive
Recital 32

Text proposed by the Commission

(32) In line with international standards, prevention and mitigation as well as bringing to an end and minimisation of adverse impacts should take into account the interests of those adversely impacted. In order to enable continuous engagement with the value chain business partner instead of termination of business relations (disengagement) and possibly exacerbating adverse impacts, this Directive should ensure that disengagement is a last-resort action, in line with the Union’s policy of zero-tolerance on child labour. Terminating a business relationship in which child labour was found could expose the child to even more severe adverse human rights impacts. This should therefore be taken into account when deciding on the appropriate action to take.

Terminating a business relationship in which child labour was found could expose the child to even more severe adverse human rights impacts. This should therefore be taken into account when deciding on the appropriate action to take. Companies should engage in a timely manner, efficiently and meaningfully with stakeholders impacted by the decision to suspend or terminate the adverse impacts before reaching that decision, and shall assess any potential adverse impacts that may arise from those actions.

Amendment 10
Proposal for a directive
Recital 34

Text proposed by the Commission

Amendment
So as to comply with the prevention and mitigation obligation under this Directive, companies should be required to take the following actions, where relevant. Where necessary due to the complexity of prevention measures, companies should develop and implement a prevention action plan. Companies should seek to obtain contractual assurances from a direct partner with whom they have an established business relationship that it will ensure compliance with the code of conduct or the prevention action plan, including by seeking corresponding contractual assurances from its partners to the extent that their activities are part of the companies’ value chain. The contractual assurances should be reasonable, non-discriminatory and accompanied by appropriate measures to verify compliance. To ensure comprehensive prevention of actual and potential adverse impacts, companies should also make investments which aim to prevent adverse impacts, provide targeted and proportionate support for an SME with which they have a business relationship such as financing, for example, through direct financing, low-interest loans, guarantees of continued sourcing, and assistance in securing financing, to help implement the code of conduct or prevention action plan, or technical guidance such as in the form of training, management systems upgrading, and collaborate with other companies.

Amendment 11
Proposal for a directive
Recital 35

Text proposed by the Commission

(35) In order to reflect the full range of options for the company in cases where potential impacts could not be addressed by the described prevention or minimisation measures, this Directive should also refer to the possibility for the company to seek to conclude a contract with the indirect business partner, with a view to achieving compliance with the company’s code of conduct or a prevention action plan, and conduct appropriate measures to verify compliance of the indirect business relationship with the contract.

Amendment 12
Proposal for a directive
Recital 37

Text proposed by the Commission

(37) As regards direct and indirect business relationships, industry cooperation, industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives can help create additional leverage to identify, mitigate, and prevent adverse impacts. Therefore it should be possible for companies to rely on such initiatives to support the implementation of their due diligence obligations laid down in this Directive to the extent that such schemes and initiatives are appropriate to support the fulfilment of those obligations. Companies could assess, at their own initiative, the alignment of these schemes and initiatives with the obligations under this Directive. In order to ensure full information on such initiatives, the Directive should also refer to the possibility for the Commission and the Member States to facilitate the dissemination of information on such schemes or initiatives and their outcomes. The Commission, in collaboration with Member States, may issue guidance for assessing the fitness of industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives.

with the due diligence requirements imposed by this Directive. Reliance on industry schemes and multi-stakeholder initiatives shall not absolve the company of its individual responsibility and obligations to perform due diligence in accordance with this Directive.

Amendment 13
Proposal for a directive
Recital 39

Text proposed by the Commission

(39) So as to comply with the obligation of bringing to an end and minimising the extent of actual adverse impacts under this Directive, companies should be required to take the following actions, where relevant. They should neutralise the adverse impact or minimise its extent, with an action proportionate to the significance and scale of the adverse impact and to the contribution of the company’s conduct to the adverse impact. Where necessary due to the fact that the adverse impact cannot be immediately brought to an end, companies should develop and implement a corrective action plan with reasonable and clearly defined timelines for action and qualitative and quantitative indicators for measuring improvement. Companies should also seek to obtain contractual assurances from a direct business partner with whom they have an established business relationship that they will ensure compliance with the company’s code of conduct and, as necessary, a prevention action plan, including by seeking corresponding contractual assurances from its partners, to the extent that their activities are part of the company’s value chain. Recourse to the complaints and remediation mechanism should not prevent the complainant from having recourse to judicial remedies. In accordance with international standards, complaints should be entitled to request from the company appropriate follow-up on the complaint and to meet with the company’s representatives at an appropriate level to discuss potential or actual severe adverse impacts that are the subject matter of the complaint. (43) Companies should monitor the implementation and effectiveness of their due diligence measures. They should carry out periodic assessments of their own operations, those of their subsidiaries and, where related to the value chains of the company, those of their established business relationships, to monitor the effectiveness of the identification, prevention, minimisation, bringing to an end and mitigation of human rights and environmental adverse impacts. Such assessments should verify that adverse impacts are properly identified, due diligence measures are implemented and adverse impacts have actually been prevented or brought to an end. In order to ensure that such assessments are up-to-date, they should be carried out at least every 12 months and be revised in-between if there are reasonable grounds to believe that significant new risks of adverse impact could have arisen.

(44) Like in the existing international standards set by the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and the OECD framework, it forms part of the due diligence requirement to communicate externally relevant information on due diligence policies, processes and activities conducted to identify and address actual or potential adverse impacts, including the findings and outcomes of those activities. The proposal to amend Directive 2013/34/EU as regards corporate sustainability reporting sets out relevant reporting obligations for the companies covered by this directive. In order to avoid duplicating reporting obligations, this Directive should therefore not introduce any new reporting obligations in addition to those under Directive 2013/34/EU for the companies covered by that Directive as well as the reporting standards that should be developed under it. As regards companies that are within the scope of this Directive, but do not fall under Directive 2013/34/EU, in order to comply with their obligation of communicating as part of the due diligence under this Directive, they should publish on their website an annual statement in a language customary in the sphere of international business.

(44) Like in the existing international standards set by the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and the OECD framework, it forms part of the due diligence requirement to communicate externally relevant information on due diligence policies, processes and activities conducted to identify and address actual or potential adverse impacts, including the findings and outcomes of those activities. The proposal to amend Directive 2013/34/EU as regards corporate sustainability reporting sets out relevant reporting obligations for the companies covered by this directive. In order to avoid duplicating reporting obligations, this Directive should therefore not introduce any new reporting obligations in addition to those under Directive 2013/34/EU for the companies covered by that Directive as well as the reporting standards that should be developed under it. As regards companies that are within the scope of this Directive, but do not fall under Directive 2013/34/EU, in order to comply with their obligation of communicating as part of the due diligence under this Directive, they should publish on their website an annual statement in a language customary in the sphere of international business. _This reporting should be accessible and sufficiently detailed to demonstrate the compliance of a company’s due diligence process with this Directive. Such engagement should be proportionate to a company’s capability to carry out such engagement. Such engagement should be carried out in a timely, accessible and transparent manner.

Amendment

(46) In order to provide support and practical tools to companies or to Member State authorities on how companies should fulfil their due diligence obligations, the Commission, using relevant international guidelines and standards as a reference, and in consultation with Member States and stakeholders, the European Union Agency for Fundamental Rights, the European Environment Agency, and where appropriate with international bodies having expertise in due diligence, should issue guidelines, including for specific sectors or specific adverse impacts, in particular taking into account the needs of SMEs, and should enable financial and

(47) Although SMEs are not included in the scope of this Directive, they could be impacted by its provisions as contractors or subcontractors to the companies which are in the scope. The aim is nevertheless to mitigate financial or administrative burden on SMEs, many of which are already struggling in the context of the global economic and sanitary crisis. In order to support SMEs, Member States should set up and operate, either individually or jointly, dedicated websites, portals or platforms, and Member States could also financially support SMEs and help them build capacity. Such support should also be made accessible, and where necessary adapted and extended to upstream economic operators in third countries. Companies whose business partner is an SME are also encouraged to support them to comply with due diligence measures, in case such requirements would jeopardize the viability of the SME and use fair, reasonable, non-discriminatory and proportionate requirements vis-a-vis the SMEs.

(65) Persons who work for companies subject to due diligence obligations under this Directive or who are in contact with such companies in the context of their work-related activities can play a key role in exposing breaches of the rules of this Directive. They can thus contribute to preventing and deterring such breaches and strengthening the enforcement of this Directive. Directive (EU) 2019/1937 of the European Parliament and of the Council should therefore apply to the reporting of all breaches of this Directive and to the protection of persons reporting such breaches.
