22. Stresses that such a partnership could be established under the Framework Participation Agreement which administers the role of third countries, thereby making the possibility of UK participation in civilian and military EU missions (with no lead role for the UK) and operations, programmes and projects, the sharing of intelligence, the training and exchange of military personnel, and collaboration on armaments policy as likely as that of any other friendly third country; affirms that such cooperation is conditional on full compliance with international human rights law and international humanitarian law, and with EU fundamental rights legislation; underlines that such participation should be without prejudice to and consistent with relevant EU positions, decisions and legislation, including on procurement and transfers in the field of defence; believes that participation under the permanent structured cooperation (PESCO) should be reserved for Member States only; points out that participation by third countries could jeopardise the internal procedures and interests of the EU and raise obstacles to the implementation of important common security and defence policy provisions of the Lisbon Treaty and of key operational arrangements such as a permanent military headquarters for
