by Per Stenmarck (PPE-DE)
to the Commission

Subject: Trans-European networks

The European Council meeting in Essen in 1994 adopted a number of priority TEN projects. One of those fourteen projects was the development of the 'Nordic triangle', an important project for infrastructure in the Nordic region. In its progress report on these TEN projects, the Commission notes that Sweden is not fulfilling its commitments, which is affecting the necessary expansion of capacity on the E6 and E4, not to mention the Malmö-Trelleborg stretch of the E6, which is so important for the country's imports and exports. What does the Commission intend to do in response to Sweden's failure to act and the delay in complying with these commitments which are such important infrastructure projects for Sweden and for Europe?
