Subject: Alleged omissions in Commission report

The Commission's Health and Consumers DG has published an interesting report entitled 'The State of Men's Health in Europe', which provides a comprehensive overview of the health of men in every European country and compares their lifestyles. However, one of the authors of the report, a professor of psychology at Copenhagen University Hospital, has accused the Commission of censorship. According to the professor, the Commission failed to include in the report research made in connection with homosexuality, condom use, divorce and suicide.

How does the Commission respond to this accusation?
