Subject: Educating migrants

Education is a vital element in promoting the effective integration of migrants into European society. It also enables migrants to gain the skills that they need to function on the labour market and to play an active role in community life.

In view of the current influx of immigrants, Member States are faced with the task of providing them with access to education and training.

Can the Commission support the Member States in ensuring that migrants receive adequate education? If so, how?

How does the Commission intend to prevent young people from outside the EU from leaving school prematurely?
