Subject: Chemtrails

Citizens, farmers and numerous environmental organisations, both in Europe and on other continents, show continued interest in long-lasting trails left in the sky by high-flying aircraft. Particularly disturbing are the reports on chemtrails, chemical trails caused by spraying chemicals in the atmosphere in an effort to change weather (geoengineering) and damage the environment and human health.

Is the Commission aware of chemtrails and of any instances of their being used in the EU?

Has the Commission taken any action so far to analyse that phenomenon and evaluate its effect on the environment and EU citizens?

How does the Commission plan to protect EU citizens against such activities?
