Subject: Trade negotiations and calculation of quotas

When the Commission conducts trade negotiations with a non-member country it makes offers regarding tariff quotas for given products.

The fact that it publishes very little information about the way in which quota offers and calculations are produced is prompting questions in some quarters.

How exactly does the Commission calculate and determine its tariff quota offers to non-member countries, and what elements are factored into the calculation?

Will it publish more information about the method used to produce quota offers and calculations?
