Subject: The single digital gateway

Business growth and labour mobility within the EU single market depend on access to information about national regulations that is easy, universal and up-to-date. The recently proposed single digital gateway is a project designed to provide access to the national rules, requirements and procedures that citizens and businesses from other Member States need to know about and comply with to start their professional activities. As communicated, to assist the user with this journey, the gateway is planned to cover three strands, namely information, procedures and assistance services.

1. Will the single digital gateway comprise a single centralised platform, or will it function as a directory leading to different digital sources?
2. What will the linguistic profile of the gateway be, to provide the broadest possible exchange of information between different Member States?
3. What kind of assistance services will the gateway provide, and will it also include national information and assistance points?
