Subject: Brexit

The UK is expected to leave the EU in just over a month, but the nature of Brexit is still no clearer than before. European leaders are opposed to the idea of renegotiating the withdrawal deal, in particular the Irish border aspect. This makes it all the more likely the UK will leave without a deal.

At the moment, the President of the European Council takes the view that the deadline for Brexit could be postponed.

What real advances would be brought by postponing Brexit?

Could the postponement lead to a different agreement being reached?
