Subject: Skills and competencies for the future workforce

Over the last few decades we have witnessed a shift in the skills and competencies required of the future workforce. People, and in particular students, are expected to gain more than just the basic literacy and numeracy skills and be capable of rapidly responding to the changing demands of the future workforce. To do so requires innovative teaching methods and learning processes in Europe and the Member States.

What is the Commission doing to guarantee that European citizens, students and workers are equipped with the skills and competencies needed for the 21st century?

What action is the Commission taking to support and promote new investment in innovative learning spaces and processes?
