Subject: Violence against women

Under the slogan 'violence does not take vacations', European feminist associations and foundations have been sounding the alarm regarding an increase in Europe of the number of women being beaten and killed by husbands, friends or other family members, despite measures being proposed by the Member States and the existence of a strategy at European level.

- 1) To what extent is the Commission monitoring this situation in Europe?
- 2) Will it launch an information campaign in cooperation with the Member States in a bid to combat violence against women and give its support to education and information programmes to prevent such situations arising?
