Subject: 5G network

In response to health concerns, the Brussels-Capital Region and the city of Geneva have halted the development of the fifth-generation mobile telephony network (5G network).

This raises the following questions:

1. Has the Commission seen reliable studies which categorically state that 5G radiation poses no danger to living organisms?

2. How does the Commission explain the fact that Member States are setting a range of different limit values for radiation from mobile telephony networks?
