Subject: Digital Green Pass

The 'digital green pass' could be an important tool for restoring some degree of normality with regard to the mobility of Europeans, and could bring hope to economic sectors such as the tourism sector, which have been decimated by the pandemic.

However, this 'digital green pass' raises some concerns, so I would like to ask the following questions:

Is the Council prepared to guarantee that this instrument will not potentially promote inequalities between European citizens who have been vaccinated and those who, for whatever reason, will not have access to a vaccine over the coming months?

What about citizens from outside the EU (Europeans and those from other continents), do we have the means necessary at our disposal to categorise them in such a way so as to eliminate any potential discrimination?
