Subject: ICCAT bluefin tuna catch strategy

In the framework of the negotiations of the International Commission for the Conservation of Atlantic Tunas (ICCAT), a bluefin tuna catch strategy is being discussed and could already be implemented next year. So far I have been aware of the current capture strategy for albacore in the North Atlantic.

1. Could the Commission provide information on the objectives and timelines of the process for adopting this strategy for bluefin tuna?
2. What is the Commission's commitment as regards the adoption of this strategy?
3. What action is the Commission taking with regard to the consultation of stakeholders, i.e. the fisheries sector and other organisations such as environmental organisations?
