Subject: Seasonal changes of time

For several years there has been talk of discontinuing the practice of seasonal changes of time in the EU. No progress has been made because, among other things, the Member States have not been able to agree on whether winter or summer time should remain.

Has consideration been given to a compromise whereby the time would, once and for all, be moved forward or backward by 30 minutes and set as the official time, providing all the advantages of summer and winter time?
