Subject: Conference on the Future of Europe – halfway point

The Conference on the Future of Europe is the first pan-European exercise on democracy, with citizen-led debates and discussions giving people from all corners of the EU the opportunity to share ideas and help mould the future of Europe. That was the EU's idea, anyway, but halfway through the conference, the results are rather disappointing.

1. What does the Commission make of the work produced so far?
2. What outcomes does it expect from the conference?
3. How much has been invested in it to date?
